Foreword

In the mid-1990s, reports by its medical staff alerted the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to the alarmingly high number of civilians being treated for injuries caused by anti-personnel mines. The reports gave graphic descriptions of the suffering caused by these devices: designed to maim rather than kill, anti-personnel mines sever one or more limbs and drive soil, grass, cloth, fragments of the mine and shattered bone into the muscles or lower parts of the body. Anti-personnel mines do kill, but more often they cause permanent disabilities that require extensive rehabilitation, as well as long-term psychological, social and economic support. The first-hand accounts of ICRC staff emphatically demonstrated the ways in which these weapons constituted a cruel and enduring threat to civilians and local communities long after conflicts had ended. This led the ICRC, in 1994, to call for a global ban on anti-personnel mines. The ICRC's appeal followed one launched the previous year, by a group of non-governmental organizations in the International Campaign to Ban Landmines (ICBL).

Anti-personnel mines are small explosive devices placed in, on or near the ground. When a person steps on, handles or approaches the device, it causes a powerful blast capable of maiming or killing one or several people. Unlike most other weapons, anti-personnel mines are "victim-activated": once deployed, they can have indiscriminate effects, putting all those who come in contact with them at risk of losing their limbs or lives. These devices will continue to exact their toll until they are cleared, which in most cases takes years, even decades. Anti-personnel mines were first used on a large scale during the Second World War. In the decades that followed, armed forces and armed groups placed millions of them in the ground. By the time the international community began to grasp the long-term consequences of using these weapons, in the 1990s, tens of thousands of civilians had been killed or maimed for life and the threat to civilians had spread to most regions of the world.

The International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, together with the ICBL, the United Nations and many States, joined forces in a major campaign focusing the world's attention on the suffering caused by anti-personnel mines, mobilizing public support for a ban and stimulating high-level political and military support to this end. This endeavour led to the launch of international negotiations to ban these weapons in 1996. Only a year later, on 3 December 1997, 121 States signed the Convention on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines in Ottawa, Canada.

The Convention is remarkable in several ways.

Its adoption marked the first time in history that States had agreed to ban a weapon that was widely used by armed forces throughout the world. This ban had a solid basis in international humanitarian law, which prohibits the use of weapons that do not distinguish between civilians and combatants or that cause unnecessary suffering or superfluous injury.

The Convention is also significant in that it goes beyond comprehensively prohibiting the use, production, stockpiling and transfer of anti-personnel mines. It also contains commitments to respond to the humanitarian consequences of the use of these weapons by assisting their victims, removing the threat of mines already in the ground within set time frames and reducing the risk to civilians through preventive actions such as the marking of dangerous areas and the provision of warnings and risk education. It further requires the complete destruction of stockpiled anti-personnel mines within four years. The Convention was, from the outset, not only a set of prohibitions but also a humanitarian plan of action aimed at ensuring that mine-affected communities would one day be free of the threat of anti-personnel mines and that mine survivors would receive the assistance they need to lead full lives with dignity.

The achievements of the Convention to date are impressive. With more than three-quarters of the world's countries having joined the treaty, it has achieved widespread adherence in record time. States Parties have destroyed tens of millions of stockpiled mines and cleared vast areas of contaminated land in mine-affected countries, freeing it up for productive use by the local population. Moreover, most States not party to the treaty have ceased the use, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines. Finally, and most significantly, the number of new mine victims has fallen sharply in areas where the implementation of the Convention is ongoing, a good indication that a future in which communities can be safe from these weapons is now a goal within reach.

Despite these impressive results, important challenges remain. Too few mine-affected countries have, so far, been able to declare themselves free of mines and massive numbers of anti-personnel mines remain in the ground. Thousands of innocent civilians are killed or maimed each year and reconstruction and development efforts, in areas where land is a precious commodity, are being hindered. The provision of adequate care and assistance to victims is also a long-term challenge for affected countries, often being in competition for scarce resources with other urgent priorities. The hundreds of thousands of survivors who are permanently disabled require lifelong support. As with other disabled persons, their right to participate fully in society must be ensured.

Finally, there are still a number of countries that have not joined the treaty, including some that hold significant stockpiles of anti-personnel mines. The only way to guarantee that these weapons will never be used is by ensuring the destruction of all existing stocks. Although most States that retain anti-personnel mines have not employed them in recent years, a small number of States and a number of non-State armed groups have nevertheless continued to use them.

The ICRC attaches great importance to the prohibition of anti-personnel mines and works actively to promote universal adherence to the Convention and full implementation of its obligations. It has prepared materials to assist States that are considering adherence, including a ratification kit containing model instruments of accession. It has also produced models for the development of national legislation to implement the Convention. Through its delegations around the world, the ICRC is ready to provide further information, legal advice and support related to adherence and implementation of the treaty.

While the Convention prohibiting anti-personnel mines is a remarkable achievement in itself, it has also inspired subsequent initiatives to protect civilians from other explosive munitions that pose serious threats. These initiatives have resulted in the adoption of two new international agreements: the 2003 Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War to the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons and the 2008 Convention on Cluster Munitions. Together, the three treaties provide a broad legal framework to protect civilians from weapons that “keep on killing after conflicts.”

The ICRC urges all States that have not yet done so to adhere to the Convention on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines, as well as to the treaties on explosive remnants of war and cluster munitions. By so doing, States can ensure that civilians, who far too often bear the brunt of modern warfare, will not also have to live in fear of these weapons for years or decades after the fighting ends.

Preamble

The States Parties,

Determined to put an end to the suffering and casualties caused by anti-personnel mines, that kill or maim hundreds of people every week, mostly innocent and defenceless civilians and especially children, obstruct economic development and reconstruction, inhibit the repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons, and have other severe consequences for years after emplacement,

Believing it necessary to do their utmost to contribute in an efficient and coordinated manner to face the challenge of removing anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world, and to assure their destruction,

Wishing to do their utmost in providing assistance for the care and rehabilitation, including the social and economic reintegration of mine victims,

Recognizing that a total ban of anti-personnel mines would also be an important confidence-building measure,

Welcoming the adoption of the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices, as amended on 3 May 1996, annexed to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and calling for the early ratification of this Protocol by all States which have not yet done so,

Welcoming also United Nations General Assembly Resolution 51/45 S of 10 December 1996 urging all States to pursue vigorously an effective, legally-binding international agreement to ban the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel landmines,

Welcoming furthermore the measures taken over the past years, both unilaterally and multilaterally, aiming at prohibiting, restricting or suspending the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines,

Stressing the role of public conscience in furthering the principles of humanity as evidenced by the call for a total ban of anti-personnel mines and recognizing the efforts to that end undertaken by the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, the International Campaign to Ban Landmines and numerous other non-governmental organizations around the world,

Recalling the Ottawa Declaration of 5 October 1996 and the Brussels Declaration of 27 June 1997 urging the international community to negotiate an international and legally binding agreement prohibiting the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines,

Emphasizing the desirability of attracting the adherence of all States to this Convention, and determined to work strenuously towards the promotion of its universalization in all relevant fora including, inter alia, the United Nations, the Conference on Disarmament, regional organizations, and groupings, and review conferences of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects,

Basing themselves on the principle of international humanitarian law that the right of the parties to an armed conflict to choose methods or means of warfare is not unlimited, on the principle that prohibits the employment in armed conflicts of weapons, projectiles and materials and methods of warfare of a nature to cause superfluous injury or unnecessary suffering and on the principle that a distinction must be made between civilians and combatants,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

Article 2

Definitions

1. "Anti-personnel mine" means a mine designed to be exploded by the presence, proximity or contact of a person and that will incapacitate, injure or kill one or more persons. Mines designed to be detonated by the presence, proximity or contact of a Vehicle as opposed to a person, that are equipped with anti-handling devices, are not considered anti-personnel mines as a result of being so equipped.
2. "Mine" means a munition designed to be placed under, on or near the ground or other surface area and to be exploded by the presence, proximity or contact of a person or a vehicle.
3. "Anti-handling device" means a device intended to protect a mine and which is part of, linked to, attached to or placed under the mine and which activates when an attempt is made to tamper with or otherwise intentionally disturb the mine.

4. "Transfer" involves, in addition to the physical movement of anti-personnel mines into or from national territory, the transfer of title to and control over the mines, but does not involve the transfer of territory containing emplaced anti-personnel mines.
5. "Mined area" means an area which is dangerous due to the presence or suspected presence of mines.

Article 3

Exceptions

1. Notwithstanding the general obligations under Article 1, the retention or transfer of a number of anti-personnel mines for the development of and training in mine detection, mine clearance, or mine destruction techniques is permitted. The amount of such mines shall not exceed the minimum number absolutely necessary for the above-mentioned purposes.
2. The transfer of anti-personnel mines for the purpose of destruction is permitted.

Destruction of stockpiled anti-personnel mines

Except as provided for in Article 3, each State Party undertakes to destroy or ensure the destruction of all stockpiled anti-personnel mines it owns or possesses, or that are under its jurisdiction or control, as soon as possible but not later than four years after the entry into force of this Convention for that State Party.

Article 5

Destruction of anti-personnel mines in mined areas

1. Each State Party undertakes to destroy or ensure the destruction of all anti-personnel mines in mined areas under its jurisdiction or control, as soon as possible but not later than ten years after the entry into force of this Convention for that State Party.
2. Each State Party shall make every effort to identify all areas under its jurisdiction or control in which anti-personnel mines are known or suspected to be emplaced and shall ensure as soon as possible that all anti-personnel mines in mined areas under its jurisdiction or control are perimeter-marked, monitored and protected by fencing or other means, to ensure the effective exclusion of civilians, until all anti-personnel mines contained therein have been destroyed. The marking shall at least be to the standards set out in the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices, as amended on 3 May 1996, annexed to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects.
3. If a State Party believes that it will be unable to destroy or ensure the destruction of all anti-personnel mines referred to in paragraph 1 within that time period, it may submit a request to a Meeting of the States Parties or a Review Conference for an extension of the deadline for completing the destruction of such anti-personnel mines, for a period of up to ten years.
4. Each request shall contain:
 - a) The duration of the proposed extension;
 - b) A detailed explanation of the reasons for the proposed extension, including:
 - i) The preparation and status of work conducted under national demining programs;

 - iii) Circumstances which impede the ability of the State Party to destroy all the anti-personnel mines in mined areas;
 - d) The humanitarian, social, economic, and environmental implications of the extension; and
 - e) Any other information relevant to the request for the proposed extension.
5. The Meeting of the States Parties or the Review Conference shall, taking into consideration the factors contained in paragraph 4, assess the request and decide by a majority of votes of States Parties present and voting whether to grant the request for an extension period.
6. Such an extension may be renewed upon the submission of a new request in accordance with paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of this Article. In requesting a further extension period a State Party shall submit relevant additional information on what has been undertaken in the previous extension period pursuant to this Article.

The States Parties shall not impose undue restrictions on the provision of mine clearance equipment and related technological information for humanitarian purposes.

3. Each State Party in a position to do so shall provide assistance for the care and rehabilitation, and social and economic reintegration, of mine victims and for mine awareness programs. Such assistance may be provided, inter alia, through the United Nations system, international, regional or national organizations or institutions, the International Committee of the Red Cross, national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies and their International Federation, non-governmental organizations, or on a bilateral basis.

7. States Parties may request the United Nations, regional organizations, other States Parties or other competent intergovernmental or non-governmental fora to assist its authorities in the elaboration of a national demining program to determine, inter alia:
 - a) The extent and scope of the anti-personnel mine problem;
 - b) The financial, technological and human resources that are required for the implementation of the program;

- c) The estimated number of years necessary to destroy all anti-personnel mines in mined areas under the jurisdiction or control of the concerned State Party;

Article 8

Facilitation and clarification of compliance

1. The States Parties agree to consult and cooperate with each other regarding the implementation of the provisions of this Convention, and to work together in a spirit of cooperation to facilitate compliance by States Parties with their obligations under this Convention.
2. If one or more States Parties wish to clarify and seek to resolve questions relating to compliance with the provisions of this Convention by another State Party, it may submit, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, a Request for Clarification of that matter to that State Party. Such a request shall be accompanied by all appropriate information. Each State Party shall refrain from unfounded Requests for Clarification, care being taken to avoid abuse. A State Party that receives a Request for Clarification shall provide, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, within 28 days to the requesting State Party all information which would assist in clarifying this matter.
3. If the requesting State Party does not receive a response through the Secretary-General of the United Nations within that time period, or deems the response to the Request for Clarification to be unsatisfactory, it may submit the matter through the Secretary-General of the United Nations to the next Meeting of the States Parties. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit the submission, accompanied by all appropriate information pertaining to the Request for Clarification, to all States Parties. All such information shall be presented to the requested State Party which shall have the right to respond.

4. Pending the convening of any meeting of the States Parties, any of the States Parties concerned may request the Secretary-General of the United Nations to exercise his or her good offices to facilitate the clarification requested.
5. The requesting State Party may propose through the Secretary-General of the United Nations the convening of a Special Meeting of the States Parties to consider the matter. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall thereupon communicate this proposal and all information submitted by the States Parties concerned, to all States Parties with a request that they indicate whether they favour a Special Meeting of the States Parties, for the purpose of considering the matter. In the event that within 14 days from the date of such communication, at least one-third of the States Parties favours such a Special Meeting, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene this Special Meeting of the States Parties within a further 14 days. A quorum for this Meeting shall consist of a majority of States Parties.
6. The Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties, as the case may be, shall first determine whether to consider the matter further, taking into account all information submitted by the States Parties concerned. The Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties shall make every effort to reach a decision by consensus. If despite all efforts to that end no agreement has been reached, it shall take this decision by a majority of States Parties present and voting.
7. All States Parties shall cooperate fully with the Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties in the fulfilment of its review of the matter, including any fact-finding missions that are authorized in accordance with paragraph 8.

8. If further clarification is required, the Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties shall authorize a fact-finding mission and decide on its mandate by a majority of States Parties present and voting. At any time the requested State Party may invite a fact-finding mission to its territory. Such a mission shall take place without a decision by a Meeting of the States Parties or a Special Meeting of the States Parties to authorize such a mission. The mission, consisting of up to 9 experts, designated and approved in accordance with paragraphs 9 and 10, may collect additional information on the spot or in other places directly related to the alleged compliance issue under the jurisdiction or control of the requested State Party.
9. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall prepare and update a list of the names, nationalities and other relevant data of qualified experts provided by States Parties and communicate it to all States Parties. Any expert included on this list shall be regarded as designated for all fact-finding missions unless a State Party declares its non-acceptance in writing. In the event of non-acceptance, the expert shall not participate in fact-finding missions on the territory or any other place under the jurisdiction or control of the objecting State Party, if the non-acceptance was declared prior to the appointment of the expert to such missions.
10. Upon receiving a request from the Meeting of the States Parties or a Special Meeting of the States Parties, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall, after consultations with the requested State Party, appoint the members of the mission, including its leader. Nationals of States Parties requesting the fact-finding mission or directly affected by it shall not be appointed to the mission. The members of the fact-finding mission shall enjoy privileges and immunities under Article VI of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, adopted on 13 February 1946.

11. Upon at least 72 hours notice, the members of the fact-finding mission shall arrive in the territory of the requested State Party at the earliest opportunity. The requested State Party shall take the necessary administrative measures to receive, transport and accommodate the mission, and shall be responsible for ensuring the security of the mission to the maximum extent possible while they are on territory under its control.
12. Without prejudice to the sovereignty of the requested State Party, the fact-finding mission may bring into the territory of the requested State Party the necessary equipment which shall be used exclusively for gathering information on the alleged compliance issue. Prior to its arrival, the mission will advise the requested State Party of the equipment that it intends to utilize in the course of its fact-finding mission.
13. The requested State Party shall make all efforts to ensure that the fact-finding mission is given the opportunity to speak with all relevant persons who may be able to provide information related to the alleged compliance issue.
14. The requested State Party shall grant access for the fact-finding mission to all areas and installations under its control where facts relevant to the compliance issue could be expected to be collected. This shall be subject to any arrangements that the requested State Party considers necessary for:
 - a) The protection of sensitive equipment, information and areas;
 - b) The protection of any constitutional obligations the requested State Party may have with regard to proprietary rights, searches and seizures, or other constitutional rights; or
 - c) The physical protection and safety of the members of the fact-finding mission.

In the event that the requested State Party makes such arrangements, it shall make every reasonable effort to demonstrate through alternative means its compliance with this Convention.

15. The fact-finding mission may remain in the territory of the State Party concerned for no more than 14 days, and at any particular site no more than 7 days, unless otherwise agreed.
16. All information provided in confidence and not related to the subject matter of the fact-finding mission shall be treated on a confidential basis.
17. The fact-finding mission shall report, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, to the Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties the results of its findings.
18. The Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties shall consider all relevant information, including the report submitted by the fact-finding mission, and may request the requested State Party to take measures to address the compliance issue within a specified period of time. The requested State Party shall report on all measures taken in response to this request.
19. The Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties may suggest to the States Parties concerned ways and means to further clarify or resolve the matter under consideration, including the initiation of appropriate procedures in conformity with international law. In circumstances where the issue at hand is determined to be due to circumstances beyond the control of the requested State Party, the Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties may recommend appropriate measures, including the use of cooperative measures referred to in Article 6.
20. The Meeting of the States Parties or the Special Meeting of the States Parties shall make every effort to reach its decisions referred to in paragraphs 18 and 19 by consensus, otherwise by a two-thirds majority of States Parties present and voting.

Article 9

MISSION

The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) is an impartial, neutral and independent organization whose exclusively humanitarian mission is to protect the lives and dignity of victims of armed conflict and other situations of violence and to provide them with assistance.

The ICRC also endeavours to prevent suffering by promoting and strengthening humanitarian law and universal humanitarian principles.

Established in 1863, the ICRC is at the origin of the Geneva Conventions and the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement. It directs and coordinates the international activities conducted by the Movement in armed conflicts and other situations of violence.

The Convention on the Prohibition of Anti-personnel Mines is an important instrument of international humanitarian law. It prohibits the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines and requires the destruction of existing stocks. It also commits States to clearing contaminated areas, taking interim measures to protect civilians from these weapons and assisting victims.

This publication contains the text of the Convention as adopted on 18 September 1997 by a Diplomatic Conference in Oslo, Norway. It is intended to promote understanding of the Convention's stipulations and to facilitate its ratification and implementation by governments.
