The Layha for the Mujahideen: an analysis of the code of conduct for the Taliban fighters under Islamic law

Abstract
The following article focuses on the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan Rules for the Mujahideen to determine their conformity with the Islamic jus in bello. This code of conduct, or Layha, for Taliban fighters highlights limiting suicide attacks, avoiding civilian casualties, and winning the battle for the hearts and minds of the local civilian population. However, it has altered rules or created new ones for punishing captives that have not previously been used in Islamic military and legal history. Other rules disregard the principle of distinction between combatants and civilians and even allow perfidy, which is strictly prohibited in both Islamic law and international humanitarian law. The author argues that many of the Taliban rules have only a limited basis in, or are wrongly attributed to, Islamic law.

* The author wishes to thank the reviewer and Toni Pfanner, Editor-in-Chief of the International Review of the Red Cross, whose comments prompted many changes to the earlier draft. The help of Andrew Bartles-Smith, Prof. Brady Coleman, Major Nasir Jalil (retired), Ahmad Khalid, and Dr. Marty Khan is acknowledged. The quotations from the Qur’an in this work are taken, unless otherwise indicated, from the English translation by Muhammad Asad, The Message of the Qur’an, Dar Al-Andalus, Redwood Books, Trowbridge, Wiltshire, 1984, reprinted 1997.

Do the Taliban qualify as a ‘non-state armed group’?

Since this article deals with the Layha, it is important to know whether the Taliban in Afghanistan, as a fighting group, qualify as a ‘non-state Islamic actor’. In the context of international humanitarian law (IHL), ‘non-state actor’ (which includes, for example, an Islamic non-state armed group) is a broad concept and may be taken as meaning any group with a military capacity and organizational structure fighting anywhere in the world. But, as we will see below, not every non-state Muslim military group qualifies as a ‘non-state armed group’ under international humanitarian law. What counts in our discussion is whether the armed struggle waged by a Muslim group (in this case the Taliban) is in conformity with the Islamic jus in bello as well as IHL. However, by adding the adjective ‘Islamic’ and the word ‘mujahideen’, there is an expectation that the said mujahideen would have an Islamic identity and an Islamic agenda, and that their code for the conduct of hostilities would be an Islamic one and operate under coherent Islamic rules. The following analysis seeks to determine whether that expectation is fulfilled.

An armed conflict in international humanitarian law

Regarding the question whether the Taliban qualify as a ‘non-state (Islamic) actor’, it is necessary to ascertain in what circumstances a conflict amounts to an armed conflict under IHL. According to the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY), ‘an armed conflict exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between States or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organized armed groups or between such groups within a State’. Furthermore, the ICTY has specified two elements required for a conflict between governmental authorities and non-state armed groups to become an ‘armed conflict’: the non-state actor should be well organized and have a hierarchal structure; and the conflict should reach a certain level of intensity. A non-state armed group that does not fulfil these two conditions is not subject to IHL and their activities may be dealt with under domestic law as banditry, terrorist actions, or unorganized

1 So far, there have been at least three editions of the Layha for the Mujahideen. The first was published on 1 August 2006 and contained only thirty-nine sections. The second was published on 9 May 2009 and consisted of sixty-seven sections. The third (present) edition was published on 29 May 2010 and has eighty-five sections. The preamble states that ‘all the military, administrative authorities, as well as all mujahideen must comply in their jihadi affairs with the provisions of the Layha and run their day-to-day jihadi activities according to its rules’. The Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan Layha [Rules] for the Mujahideen, 2010, p. 5 (hereafter Layha). This is repeated in Section 4 of the 2010 edition; see p. 7. All the editions are in the Pashto language and none of them mentions the place of publication.

3 The International Court of Justice (ICJ) has on many occasions given its opinion on the criterion of intensity with respect to armed attacks. The Court discussed it for the first time in the Nicaragua case (para. 191) and later in the Oil Platform case (para. 64). In both these cases, the ICJ underlined the distinction of armed attacks from other attacks by referring to the criterion of intensity.
or short-lived insurrections. The above two elements are not clearly defined by the Tribunal but it has stated in a subsequent case that ‘what matters is whether the acts are perpetrated in isolation or as a part of a protracted campaign that entails the engagement of both parties in hostilities’. If the above criteria are applied, many Muslim jihadi groups may be excluded from the definition of ‘non-state actor’ under IHL.

The Taliban as an armed group

The Taliban in Afghanistan meet all the above conditions and thereby qualify as a non-state armed actor. The present conflict in Afghanistan is internal or non-international in the sense of Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 1949, but it involves international troops from a number of countries mandated by the Security Council to fight against the Taliban. This is why the situation in Afghanistan may not fit within the old classification of international armed conflict and non-international armed conflict. A third category –internationalized non-international armed conflict – can best describe the situation.

5 ICTY, Prosecutor v. Boškoski et al., ICTY Case No. IT-04-82-T, Judgment (Trial Chamber), 10 July 2008, para. 185.
6 Many small Muslim jihadi groups, such as Harakat al-Ansar, Harakat ul-Mujahidin, Al-Umar Mujahidin (all of them operating in Kashmir), Fatah al-Islam (Gaza), and some Islamic militant groups within Somalia, fail to meet these conditions.
7 The Taliban are in effective control of many areas in Afghanistan and they run the day-to-day administration in those areas. According to an investigative article in the Wall Street Journal, the Taliban are the main beneficiaries of the Kajaki hydropower plant, repaired and upgraded by the US for more than $100 million. The Taliban charge a flat fee of 1,000 Pakistani rupees ($11.65) a month to the consumers in the areas under their control in Helmand Province. The estimated electricity revenue collected by the Taliban amounts to some $4 million a year, in a country where the monthly wages of an insurgent fighter come to around $200. The paper claims that the Taliban use the proceeds to fund their war with American and British troops. See Yaroslav Trofimov, ‘US rebuilds a power plant, and Taliban reap a windfall: insurgents charge residents for electricity the Afghan government supplies to areas under rebel control’, in Wall Street Journal (European edition), 14 July 2010, p. 14.
8 Apart from the Afghani Taliban, other typical non-state Islamic actors that have been engaged in armed conflict with a government and have, at least at times, fulfilled the stipulations of the ICTY include Al Qaeda, the Islamic Salvation Front (FIS) (Algeria), and the Abu Sayyaf Group (Philippines). The status of two Islamic groups, namely Hamas and Hezbollah, is more complicated. Hamas now controls Gaza but is still a non-state actor because the Occupied Territories (or, to be more precise, Gaza) are not yet recognized as a state. Hezbollah, on the other hand, has a political wing that is represented in the government of Lebanon, but it still qualifies only as a non-state actor. The UN Human Rights Council’s two inquiry missions to investigate human rights violations during the Second Lebanon War between Hezbollah and Israel in 2006 treated the conflict as international. See ‘Implementation of General Assembly Resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006 entitled “Human Rights Council”: Mission to Lebanon and Israel (7–14 September 2006)’, UN Doc. A/HRC/2/7, 2 October 2006; ‘Implementation of General Assembly Resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006 entitled “Human Rights Council”: Report of the Commission of Inquiry on Lebanon pursuant to Human Rights Council Resolution S-2/1’, UN Doc. A/HRC/3/2, 23 November 2006.
The relevant applicable law to non-state parties to an armed conflict is the said Common Article 3. Additional Protocol II of 1977 on non-international armed conflict is also applicable, as Afghanistan is now party to it.10 The rules in Common Article 3 have the status of customary international law and non-state groups are bound under international law by customary norms when engaging in an armed conflict. According to the decision of the Appeals Chamber of the Special Court for Sierra Leone (SCSL), ‘it is well-settled that all parties to an armed conflict, whether states or non-state actors, are bound by international humanitarian law, even though only states may become parties to international treaties’.11 Whether a conflict is international or non-international, non-state Islamic actors, such as the Taliban in our case, undoubtedly do have obligations under IHL.

The status of the Taliban under Islamic law

It is interesting to consider the status of the Taliban under Islamic law, particularly since the crux of the opinions of many Muslim scholars is that the US attack that led to the dismantling of the Taliban government in Afghanistan was illegal.12 Another interesting question is whether the Taliban in Afghanistan can be considered as ‘Ahl al-Baghi’, or rebels under Islamic law. Muslim jurists have laid down four conditions for a group to qualify as Ahl al-Baghi: first, rebelling against state authority by not fulfilling their obligations and refusing loyalty to state laws; second, possessing power and strength; third, openly revolting and fighting against the political authority; and, finally, having their own innovative interpretation of Islamic law to which they strictly adhere (this last condition is controversial).13

12 It is argued that, since the Taliban government did not plan or carry out the 11 September 2001 terrorist attacks on the US, they were not really blameworthy, and thus the dismantling of their government was not warranted. According to Mufti M. Taqi Uthmani, the US attack and overthrow of the Taliban regime was illegal. See Mufti M. Taqi Uthmani, Al-Balag, January 2002, pp. 6–7. See also Sheikh Yusuf al-Qaradawi, Fiqh al-Jihad Dirasa Muqarana li Akhamihi wa Falsafatih fi dhaw-i- al-Qur’an wa al-Sunnah, Dar al-Kutub, Cairo, 2009, Vol. 1, p. 711. The Sheikh rejects the toppling of the Taliban and considers the help provided to the Western-backed government in Kabul illegal and incompatible with the conditions laid down by Muslim jurists for seeking help from non-Muslims; see pp. 710–711. Mufti Zahidur Rashidi and Moulana Ammar Khan Nasir are also of the opinion that the toppling of the Taliban regime was illegal. See their views in a special issue of Al-Shari’ah on ‘Al Qaeda, the Taliban and the current war in Afghanistan’, October 2010, pp. 13–57, esp. pp. 17–19, 23, 25, 30, 50.
13 The fourth condition, i.e. innovation of ‘ta’wil’, or their own interpretation of the law, is required by the jamhur (majority) of Muslim jurists. A well-known example of such rebels in Islamic history is that of the Kharijites (Muslim dissenters). See Muhammad b. Idris al-Shafi’i, Al-Umm, Dar al-Ma’rifa, Beirut, n.d., Vol. 4, p. 216; and ‘Abdullah b. Ahmad b. Muhammad b. Qudama, Al-Mughni ‘Ala Muktasar al-Khirqi bi Sharh al-Kabir ‘ala matn al-muqr’, Dar al-kutub al-Arabi, Beirut, 1972, Vol. 10, p. 52. Some Muslim jurists do not consider the condition of ta’wil necessary, deeming it enough if the rebels only aim to gain power and authority. The obvious example of this category is when ‘Abdullah b. Zubair was chosen by the people of Hijaz, Iraq, and Egypt as their head of state, but his group was defeated by the Umayyad Caliph Marwan b. al-Hakam. See ‘Ali b. Ahmad b. Sa’eed, b. Hazm, Al-Muhalla, Dar al-Fikr, Beirut, n.d.,
When the rebels cannot be induced by peaceful means to lay down their arms, the Muslim political authority must fight them to bring them into submission rather than to wipe them out. However, as stated above, contemporary Muslim scholars consider the toppling of the Taliban regime in Afghanistan as illegal and view their war with the occupying power as legal. Thus, the Taliban do not constitute an example of ‘Ahl al-Baghi’ under Islamic law.

The Taliban’s attitude towards Islamic law on the conduct of hostilities

Before examining the Taliban’s attitude towards Islamic law on the conduct of hostilities, it is pertinent to mention that the Layha does not make any mention of, or reference to, international humanitarian law. This may be interpreted as meaning either that the Taliban do not acknowledge the existence of IHL or its application in the conflict, or that they base their rules on Islamic law instead. During their short rule in Afghanistan from 1995 to 2001, the Taliban had a very literal, rigid, and radical interpretation of Islamic law. They never referred to moderation or tolerance, or to the protection of the rights of minorities in Afghanistan.

The law of war as part of the Layha

The Taliban assert that their Layha is based on Islamic law. The latest 2010 edition mentions that the Layha was prepared in accordance with Islamic law in consultation with top scholars, muftis (jurisconsults), experts, and specialists; it is unknown, however, who these scholars, muftis, and experts are. In its jus in bello part, the code of conduct for the Taliban fighters talks of limiting suicide attacks, avoiding civilian casualties, and winning the battle for the hearts and minds of the local civilian population: Section 57, clause ii declares that ‘A brave son of Islam should not be used for lower and useless targets. The utmost effort should be made to avoid civilian casualties’. Between August 2006 and May 2010 the rules have been changed several times and three different versions have been published and enforced. This indicates that the Taliban use Islam, and the Layha in particular, both as rhetoric to serve as a source of unity and to promote mobilization and as a guarantee for compliance with the Islamic law of war.

The 2010 edition of the Layha has eighty-five sections. Not all of them are about the conduct of hostilities. In fact, only thirty-seven sections can be considered relevant to warfare, namely Sections 4, 7, 9–16 (on prisoners of war and contractors/suppliers), 17–22 (spies), 23–26 (contractors and suppliers), 27–33 (war booty), 56 (attacks), 57 (suicide attacks), 67–73 (prohibited acts), and 81 (outfit of the mujahideen). The rest concerns, among other things, administrative matters, hierarchical organization, enforcement of Shari’a law in areas under Taliban control, and the resolution of disputes between people under Taliban control as well as disputes among the Taliban themselves. We now turn to the substantive parts of the Taliban’s Layha as compared with the Islamic law of war. However, only the major provisions of the Layha will be discussed here.

The fate of captured persons in particular

Regarding prisoners of war (POWs), there seem to be three categories in the Layha: first, Afghan army soldiers, police, or other officials (Section 10); second, contractors, suppliers, drivers, and personnel of private security companies (Sections 11 and 23–26); and, finally, foreign soldiers (Section 12). In addition, provision is made for a situation that is common to all the above categories: the killing of types of captive during transportation (Section 13).

As far as the fate of those in the first category is concerned, the provincial Taliban governor has to choose between exchanging them for Taliban prisoners, releasing them without setting any condition, or releasing them after securing credible guarantees. He is not allowed to ransom them. They may be executed or given a ta’zir punishment only if ordered by the Imam, his deputy, or the provincial qadi (judge). Thus, they may be exchanged, released unconditionally, released after credible guarantee, executed, or given some other punishment under ta’zir. The provincial governor has to choose one punishment from the first three, 17 The entire Part I, i.e. Sections 1–8, is not about the conduct of war but about inducing and inviting those working for the Afghan regime to join the Taliban, and how to treat them. However, two of those sections are relevant to the conduct of war, namely Section 4, which relates to perfidy committed by a person who surrenders, and Section 7 on armed personnel of the Afghan regime who want to surrender but whose true intention is not clear.

18 Guarantee in the Layha means a guarantee to be given in terms of immovable property or a personal guarantee. It does not mean a guarantee of movable property or money guarantee. Layha, Introduction, Section 3.
19 The Imam is the head of the Taliban, Mullah Muhammad ‘Omar, and Na’ib Imam is his deputy. Layha, Introduction, Section 1. Ta’zir (deterrent, corrective) punishment is discussed below.
20 For the procedure if no provincial qadi has been appointed, see Layha, Section 10.
otherwise the Imam or his deputy or the provincial qadi will choose one of the last two. However, the governor must perform the duties of a qadi if none is appointed in a province. We will consider the Islamicity of these punishments at the end of this section.

The fate of those in the second category (contractors, suppliers, drivers, personnel of private security companies, and spokesmen for the infidels) is mentioned in Sections 11 and 23–26. According to Section 11, read in conjunction with Sections 23–26, if it is confirmed that the contractors build bases or supply materials to ‘infidels and their puppet regime’, the mujahideen should burn their supplies\(^1\) and kill such contractors.\(^2\) High- and low-ranking officials of private security companies, spokesmen for ‘infidels’, and supply drivers are to be given the death penalty by the district qadi.\(^3\) No other option is available for the qadi. There is some confusion about supply drivers: Section 24 allows their killing on the spot, while Section 11 indicates that they are given the death sentence by the district qadi. Section 26 authorizes the killing of contractors who recruit labourers or other workers.

The fate of a captive non-Muslim combatant can only be decided by the Imam or his deputy, who may choose between that person’s execution, exchange, or release without any condition or ransom.\(^4\) Under Section 13 of the Layha, if the mujahideen have taken captives (who may include locals, foreigners, combatants, contractors, drivers, etc.) and come under attack while transporting them to a secure place, they should kill them if they are enemy combatants or officials. But if the mujahideen are not sure about the identity of the captives, they must not be killed, even if this means that they have to be freed. Regarding the treatment of detainees, Section 15 provides that the mujahideen should not torture them by starvation, thirst, heat, or cold, even if they deserve death sentences or any other ta’zir punishment.\(^5\)

The fate of all the categories mentioned above may be summarized as follows. (1) Soldiers, police, and other officials of the Afghan regime may be released without any condition, exchanged, or released after they provide a credible guarantee, but they cannot be ransomed and the Taliban governor must decide their fate. They may only be executed or given ta’zir punishment if authorized by the Imam or his deputy or the provincial qadi, but the governor has to decide on the penalty if no qadi is appointed. This means that the governor is the authority in these matters. (2) All types of contractors, suppliers, drivers, personnel

\(^1\) Section 23 of the Layha allows the burning of private vehicles if used for the transport of goods or other services of ‘infidels’.
\(^2\) Ibid., Section 25.
\(^3\) Ibid., Section 11. There is no other punishment for them.
\(^4\) Ibid., Section 12.
\(^5\) According to Section 16 of the Layha, ta’zir punishment can only be given by the Imam or his deputy or qadi. The same section mentions that if a district qadi wants to give the death sentence as a ta’zir punishment, he must get the approval of the provincial qadi; if there is no provincial qadi, the governor is authorized to deal with matters of death and ta’zir.
of security companies,\(^\text{26}\) and even those contractors who recruit workers could be either killed or summarily executed or given death sentences by the qadi if arrested. (3) The fate of a captured foreign non-Muslim combatant is decided by the Imam or his deputy, who may authorize his execution, exchange, release, or ransom. (4) Hostages who are suspected of being enemy combatants or other officials can be killed if during their transportation to a secure place the mujahideen come under attack.

Evaluation under Islamic jus in bello: the Layha versus Islamic law

There are three key points to be considered from an Islamic jus in bello perspective. First, what is the fate of POWs in classical Islamic law as well as Islamic military history? Second, can ta’zir punishment be given to any detainee under Islamic law? Finally, can contractors, suppliers, carriers, drivers, and personnel of security companies be summarily executed or sentenced to death by a qadi if taken captive?

The fate of POWs in Islam

There is disagreement among the Muslim jurists of various schools of thought regarding the fate of POWs under Islam.\(^\text{27}\) I will briefly explain the interpretation of \(^\text{26}\) It is important to note that, despite their employment more often than not in combat roles (such as securing military logistic lines/oil lines or interrogation of detainees), private military companies (PMCs), also known as private military firms (PMFs) and mostly employed in Iraq and Afghanistan, are covered by existing modern-day IHL. This reflects the grey area of the law. While PMCs constitute a challenge for IHL, they are covered by IHL. Unless they are part of the armed forces of a state or have combat functions for an organized armed group belonging to a party to the conflict, members of PMCs are considered civilians. However, if they participate in hostilities they lose protection from attack during such participation and, if captured, can be tried for mere participation in hostilities. See, e.g., International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), ‘International humanitarian law and private military/security companies’, available at: http://www.icrc.org/eng/resources/documents/faq/pmsc-faq-150908.htm (last visited 22 December 2010).

\(^\text{27}\) Secondary works on Islamic jus in bello usually give some space to the issue of POWs but such works are not comprehensive. A good work is Gerhard Conrad, ‘Combatants and prisoners of war in classical Islamic law: concepts formulated by Hanafi jurists of the 12th century’, in Revue de Droit Pénal Militaire et de Droit de la Guerre, Vol. 20, Nos 3–4, 1981, pp. 271–307. This work is exclusively on POWs in Islam, but is not exhaustive and fails to elaborate the complex rules regarding POWs and the reasons behind the differences of opinion among the early Muslim jurists. Another noteworthy study is that of Khaled Abou El Fadl, ‘Saving and taking life in war: three modern Muslim views’, in Muslim World, Vol. 89, No. 2, January 1999, pp. 158–180. The first article briefly discusses the interpretation of Qur’anic verses regarding POWs; unfortunately, the author does not give references for many works discussed in his article. In the second work, the author has given a summary of Islamic law the relevant verses of the Qur’an, the sayings and the conduct of the Prophet Muhammad (Peace Be Upon Him) and his successors regarding POWs, and the opinions of prominent classical Muslim jurists.28 Taking captives is legal in the Qur’an: ‘[A]nd take them captive, and besiege them’,29 and verse 47:4 says, ‘And then tighten their bonds’. Muslim jurists agree that their fate is left to the political authority to decide as he sees fit in the best interest of the Muslim community. However, they diverge over the choices available to the Muslim state to terminate their captivity. The various options mentioned by Muslim jurists include execution, exchange, conditional or unconditional release, ransom, and enslavement. According to the majority of Muslim scholars – Maliki, Shafi’i, Hanbali, Shi’ite, Zahirite, and Awza’i – the political authority has the following options: execution, enslavement, ‘mann’ (unconditional release), and ‘fida’ (ransom or release after setting a condition or demanding a promise).30 The Malikites add to this the imposition of ‘jizyah’ (poll tax) on them.31 The Hanafi jurists agree on execution, enslavement, and setting captives free with the condition that they should pay jizyah, but there is disagreement on ransom.32 Imam Abu Yusuf33 and M. Ibn al-Hasan al-Shaybani34 allow ransom.35

The Qur’an mentions the fate of POWs in verse 47:4, which says:

Now when you meet [in war] those who are bent on denying the truth, smite their necks until you overcome them fully, and then tighten their bonds; but thereafter [set them free] either by an act of grace or against ransom, so that the burden of war may be lifted: thus [shall it be].

This verse renders execution illegal and makes captivity a temporary affair that must lead to either unconditional or conditional freedom, or freedom bought with ransom.$^{36}$ Thus, the political authority has the option of releasing prisoners against ransom, or setting them free without any ransom. This is supported by the instructions of the Prophet (PBUH) that he gave while conquering Mecca, ‘Slay no wounded person, pursue no fugitive, execute no prisoner; and whosoever closes his door is safe’. $^{37}$ ‘Ali b. Abi Talib (d. 40 AH/661 CE), Al-Hasan b. al-Hasan (d. 110 AH/728 CE), Hammad b. Abi Suliman (d. 120 AH/737 CE), $^{38}$ Muhammad b. Sirrin (d. 110 AH/728 CE), Mujahid b. Jabr Mawla (d. 103 AH/721 CE), ‘Abd al-Malik b. ‘Abd al-‘Aziz b. Jurayj (d. 150 AH/767 CE), ‘Ata b. Abi Rabbah (d. 114 AH/732 CE), $^{39}$ and Abu ‘Ubayd b. Salam were against the execution of POWs. $^{40}$ According to ‘Imaduddin Isma’il b. ‘Umar b. Kathir (d. 774 AH/1373 CE), ‘[T]he head of Muslim state has to choose between mann and fida’ only. His [a POW’s] execution is not allowed’. $^{41}$ Ibn Rushd (d. 594 AH/1198 CE) mentions that ‘A group of jurists maintained that it is not permitted to execute the prisoners. Al-Hasan b. Muhammad al-Tamimi (d. 656 AH/1258 CE) has related that there is a consensus (ijma’) of the Companions on this [that POWs shall not be executed]’. $^{42}$

According to authentic reports, in all the wars of the Prophet (PBUH) only three to five POWs were executed. Thus, only ‘Uqbah b. Abi Mu’it was executed, out of seventy captives of Badr, for his crimes against the Prophet (PBUH) and Muslims in Mecca. $^{43}$ The second was Abu ‘Izzah al-Jumahi in Uhd. $^{44}$ The third POW was ‘Abdullah b. Khatal, who was executed on the day that Mecca was conquered. $^{45}$ All of them were executed for the heinous crimes they had 36 Verses 8:67–68 of the Qur’an brought censure upon the Prophet (PBUH) because no revelation attesting to this being lawful had been sent to him and because the Companions were tempted by ransom. However, as is mentioned in these verses, ransom was legalized: ‘Enjoy, then, all that is lawful and good among the things which you have gained in war, and remain conscious of God: verily, God is much-forgiving, a dispenser of grace’.

38 M. Shaybani, above note 34, Vol. 3, p. 124. Shaybani mentions that al-Hasan only allowed the execution of POWs during war, while Hammad b. Abi Suliman used to condemn their execution after the war.

43 However, the reports about the execution of al-Nadr b. al-Harith and one of the two concubines of ‘Abdullah b. Khattal are less authentic.

44 It is said that al-Nadr b. al-Harith was killed in captivity. According to Ibn Kathir, al-Nadr was killed during the war. See Isma’il b. ‘Umar b. Kathir, al-Biday wa al-Nihaya, maktaba al-Ma’rif, Riyadh, 1966, Vol. 3, p. 35.

45 Abu ‘Ubayd, above note 42, p. 130, n. 24.

46 He was set free in Badr on condition that he would stop his blasphemous poetry against Islam and not fight the Muslims again. He broke his promise and again asked for pardon but this time he was executed. See Abu Bakr b. Ahmad al-Sarkhasi, Kitab al-Mabsut, ed. Sabir Mustafa Rabab, Dar Ihya al-Turath al-‘Arabi, Beirut, 2002, Vol. 10, p. 26.

47 He was a Muslim living in Medina but he killed an innocent Muslim, reverted to the pre-Islamic faith, joined the enemy and thereby committed high treason, embezzled public money, bought two concubines who would compose blasphemous poetry, and started a campaign against Islam. For the Islamic state committed against the Islamic State before their captivity and were wanted criminals in the Islamic State (State of Madina of which Muhammad (PBUH) was the Head). It very clearly was never an established rule at the time of the Prophet (PBUH) that POWs be executed. Probably Al-Hasan b. Muhammad al-Tamimi struck a chord when he proclaimed that the Companions of the Prophet (PBUH) were unanimous on the prohibition of the killing of POWs.48

The pro-execution jurists have cited the execution of the combatants of Banu Quraydha as an example to support their point. But can the decision of an arbitrator chosen by the Banu Quraydha themselves to decide the dispute between them and the Muslims be an example for executing POWs? Can a single incident be treated as a general rule; and can the ruling of an arbitrator be accepted as the general and established conduct of the Prophet (PBUH) and his successors? My answer is in the negative. The tribe betrayed the Muslims during the Battle of Ahzab (Arabic for ‘coalition’) by turning against them and supporting the large anti-Muslim coalition headed by the infidels of Mecca, thereby breaching the treaty between the Banu Quraydha and the Muslims, which stated that both sides would defend the city together against any external attack. Once the battle was over, the two sides agreed to refer the matter to an arbitrator. The Banu Quraydha were given the choice to choose an arbitrator and they chose Sa’d b. Mu’ad, who was their former ally and who knew the Jewish law. He decided that their combatants should be executed and that their women and children should be enslaved in accordance with that law. According to the Torah:

> When thy Lord hath delivered it [the city] unto thy hands, thou shalt smite every male therein with the edge of the sword. But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou make unto thyself.49

there were many other wanted criminals, but they were all pardoned at their request. For details see Muhammad Munir, ‘Public international law and Islamic international law: identical expressions of world order’, in Islamabad Law Review, Vol. 1, Nos 3 and 4, 2003, p. 382.

48 See M. Shaybani, above note 34, Vol. 2, p. 261. This is also the opinion of a great many classical jurists, including 'Abdullah b. 'Umar (d. 73 AH/692 CE), al-Hasan al-Basri (d. 346 AH/957 CE), 'Ata, Dhhak b. Muzahim al-Hilali (d. 100 AH/718 CE), and Ismail b. 'Abdul Rahman, known as al-Sudi (d. 127 AH/744 CE). Ibn Rushd agrees with this opinion. See A. Ibn Rushd, above note 31, Vol. 1, p. 369. According to Shi’a jurisprudence, the Imam has only three options: mahn, fida’ (ransom either for money or in exchange for POWs held by the enemy), or enslavement; Shi’a jurists consider execution while in captivity illegal. See Najmuddin al-Muhaqiq al-Hilli, Shara'i' al-Islam, ed. Syed Sadiq al-Sherazi, Dar al-Qari, Beirut, 1983, Vol. 1, p. 220.

It is clear that if the Banu Quraydha had triumphed over the Muslims they would have dealt with them in exactly the same manner. To sum up this discussion, I conclude that POWs must never be executed. The three who were executed during the life of the Prophet (PBUH) were thus penalized because of the crimes those individuals had committed against the Islamic state or its citizens before their captivity. According to Abu Yusuf Ya’qub b. Ibrahim (d. 183 AH/798 CE) and Imam Abu Bakr al-Sarkhasi, only the head of the Islamic state can decide to execute a particular POW (even if he is guilty of crimes against the state).50 Imam Sarkhasi insists that even the commander-in-chief of the army cannot decide to execute a POW.51 The reason is that execution of a prisoner of war is not a rule and to be a prisoner is not an offence per se. In other words, execution of a prisoner of war is an extraordinary act – an act of syasa (only exercised by the head of the Muslim state) and not an ordinary punishment.52 The Third Geneva Convention of 1949 on prisoners of war adopts a similar view in its Article 85, which gives the Detaining Power the right to prosecute a prisoner of war for acts committed prior to his captivity against (the Detaining Power’s) law. Under Article 118 of the Third Geneva Convention, prisoners of war must be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities.53

The conduct of the Prophet (PBUH) regarding POWs

The conduct of the Prophet (PBUH) and his successors regarding the termination of captivity of POWs is very important. There are many examples of them being set free unconditionally, such as the release of Thumama b. Athal, as well as eighty Meccan fighters.55 Similarly, all the fighters of Hawazin, Hunayn, Mecca, Banu al-Mustalaq, Banu al-Anbar, Fazara, and Yemen were set free.

52 Syasa literally means ‘policy’ and comprises the whole of administrative justice, which is dispensed by the sovereign and by his political agents, in contrast to the ideal system of Shari’a law, which is administered by the qadi. The mazalim courts and the institution of muhtasib (ombudsman) are examples of syasa in the early justice system of the Abbasid Caliphate.
54 See also Articles 109 and 111 of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949.
56 It is said that the captives of Mustaliq were first distributed among the Companions but later, when the Prophet (PBUH) married Juwayriya bt. al-Harith (d. 50 AH/670 CE), the daughter of the leader of the tribe, the Companions set the captives free. See Abu Dawud al-Sajistani, Sunan Abi Dawud, ed. Muhammad Abdul Hamid, Maktaba al-asriyya, Beirut, n.d., Hadith No. 3931, Vol. 4, p. 22; and Muhammad b. ‘Abdullah al-Nisapuri, Al-mustadrak ‘ala al-sahihayn, ed. Mustafa ‘Abdul Qadar, Dar al-kutub al-ilmiya, Beirut, 1990, Vol. 4, p. 28. One of the narrators in the chain of this hadith is considered of weak authority, which makes the hadith less authentic. See Muhammad b. Habban, Al-ilsan fi tajrib sahih Ibn Habban, ed. Shu’aib al-Arnaout, Mu’assasat al-risala, Beirut, 1988, Hadith No. 4054, Vol. 4, p. 11. However, according to an authentic report, her father procured her release and she subsequently married the Prophet (PBUH). See Shibli Nu’mani and Syed Suliman Nadawi, Sirat al-Nabi, al-Faisal Nashiran-i-Kutub, Lahore, n.d., Vol. 1, pp. 252–253.
unconditionally. Abu Bakr – the first successor of the Prophet (PBUH) – released Al-Ash’as b. Qays (d. 35 AH/656 CE). ‘Umar, the second successor, pardoned Hormuzan (d. 23 AH/643 CE), an Iranian commander. Abu ‘Ubayd argues that ransom was taken only from the POWs of Badr and was never taken again; his subsequent conduct was to pardon prisoners. ‘The later precedent from the Prophet (PBUH) is to be acted upon’, he stressed, saying that the practice of pardoning by the Prophet (PBUH) came after Badr. This view has the support of ‘Abdullah b. ‘Abbas (d. 68 AH/687 CE), ‘Abdullah b. ‘Umar, Hasan al-Basri, and ‘Ata b. Abi Rabah. This shows that the general practice of the Prophet (PBUH) and his successors was to set POWs free without any condition or ransom. According to Abu ‘Ubayd, the Prophet (PBUH) did not practise enslavement, while ‘Umar b. al-Khattab bought the slaves of pre-Islamic times and returned them to their relatives.

Thus, the established practice of the Prophet (PBUH) and his successors was to set POWs free. Ransom was taken on only one occasion, and execution was carried out only for crimes liable to the death penalty that were committed against the Islamic state before captivity. So what of the Layha, which considers execution as one of the options for some captives (such as Afghan soldiers, police, security officials, and foreign soldiers) and as the sole punishment for others (such as contractors, suppliers, carriers, drivers, and personnel of security companies), and allows the killing of captives if they are suspected to be enemy combatants and cannot be transported to a secure place because of an attack. My conclusion is that this rule of the Layha has no basis in Islamic law. Conversely, releasing POWs or exchanging them is based on Islamic law.

The fate of contractors, suppliers, and drivers

Under Islamic law, contractors, suppliers, and drivers are considered as servants. They do not participate in hostilities and their killing is strictly prohibited. It is reported that, when the Prophet (PBUH) saw the body of a slain woman among the dead at the Battle of Hunayn, he asked: ‘Who killed her?’ The Companions answered: ‘She was killed by the forces of Khalid ibn al-Walid’. The Prophet (PBUH) told one of them: ‘Run to Khalid! Tell him that the Messenger of God

58 Some 6,000 combatants of Hunayn were not only set free but each one of them was given a special Egyptian set of clothing as well. See S. Nu’mani and S. S. Nadawi, above note 56, Vol. 1, p. 368. ‘Umar b. al-Khattab ordered Abu ‘Ubayda, his commander, to release the captives of Tustar; see Abu al-‘Abas Ahmad b. Jabir al-Baladhuri, Kitaqf Futuh al-Buldan, trans. Francis Clark Murgotten, Columbia University, New York, 1924, Vol. 2, p. 119. ‘Umar also wrote to his commander to release the captives of Ahowz and Manadhir when these were captured. Ibid., pp. 112–114.

60 He paid 400 dirhams or five camels per slave and set them free and said: ‘An Arab shall not be enslaved’. See Abu ‘Ubayd, above note 40, p. 135. The enslavement of the women and children of Banu Quraydha was the result of arbitration; the Prophet (PBUH) did not enslave the POWs of other battles.
forbids him to kill children, women, and servants’. The Prophet (PBUH) is also reported to have prohibited, in the strongest possible words of the Arabic language, the killing of women and servants: ‘Never, never kill a woman and a servant’.

From this it is clear that the killing of such persons as contractors, suppliers, or drivers in an ambush, or putting them to death in captivity, is against Islamic law. It is indicative that the corresponding rules in the Layha for the punishment of contractors, suppliers, and drivers have been changed. The 2006 edition of the Layha allowed their punishment by beating or imprisonment; their killing was allowed only if they could not be captured. Moreover, their captivity would be ended by either exchanging or ransoming them or by some (unknown) punishment (but not by death). There was no death penalty for them in captivity or when they did not resist arrest. The 2009 edition of the Layha mentions for the first time that contractors, drivers, or other workers, if arrested during transportation, may be given ta’zir punishment, be exchanged, or be released unconditionally or after a credible guarantee by the governor. Ransoming was prohibited in that edition and execution could be authorized only by the Imam or his deputy. Thus, execution for this category of captives was introduced for the first time in 2009; yet, although it required the permission of the Imam, it was attributed to Islamic law.

Finally, in the 2010 edition of the Layha, contractors, suppliers, drivers, and personnel of security companies are treated as a different category from Afghan army officials. They face death whenever the mujahideen are able to strike at them. On arrest the only punishment for them is death. In the new edition, authorization of execution has been placed in the hands of the mujahideen, and otherwise of the district qadis (judges). The Imam has delegated this authority, which he had exercised since May 2009, to his soldiers and judges. To sum up, the punishment for this category of captive in 2006 was beating or imprisonment. In 2009 they were treated on a par with Afghan soldiers and there was a remote possibility of execution if authorized by the Imam. In 2010 the mujahideen are instructed to kill them in ambush, and, if such persons are arrested, the qadi must sentence them to death; no control or monitoring by the Imam or his deputy is required. The 2010 rule does not treat such persons as POWs or captives entitled to any privileges. Thus, within a period of four years the rules (each time claimed to be based on Islamic law) have been changed three times. Therefore, these rules cannot be based on Islamic law.

64 See The Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan Rules for the Mujahideen (May 2009), Sections 8, 20, and 21. The same applied to punishment for Afghan National Army members. If the captive was a commander, a district head, a high-ranking official, or a foreign Muslim, then the authority for all the above options was vested in the Imam or his deputy (Section 8).

Is ta‘zir punishment an option for the political authority to terminate captivity?

We have described above the various options that are available to the political authority to terminate the captivity of POWs, but the Layha prescribes the punishment of ta‘zir for them as well. Ta‘zir as a punishment for POWs appeared for the very first time in Islamic legal and military history in the May 2009 edition of the Layha, where it is mentioned in Sections 8, 20, and 21 as a punishment for Afghan soldiers, contractors, and drivers. The 2010 edition, in Sections 10, 15, and 16, also mentions ta‘zir punishment. Section 15 says that, although mistreatment of captives is prohibited, ‘the mujahideen have to implement ta‘zir [punishment] [to the POWs] whether it is death penalty or any other punishment’. In other words, the Layha considers execution of POWs as ta‘zir punishment. Section 16 is somewhat vague: on the one hand it says that only the Imam or his deputy or the provincial qadi are authorized to give a ta‘zir punishment, and on the other hand that the district qadi must obtain the permission of the provincial qadi for ta‘zir punishments. The governor exercises the powers of the provincial qadi if the qadi’s post is vacant. The role of the Imam or his deputy remains uncertain when a provincial qadi or governor can authorize the ta‘zir punishment. Moreover, application of the ta‘zir punishment to POWs cannot be found in any classical or modern treatise on, or text of, Islamic jus in bello.

The ta‘zir punishment occupies an important place in the Islamic criminal justice system. Punishments in Islamic law are usually grouped under four headings: hudud, ta‘zir, qesas, and diya. Hudud crimes are punishable by a hadd, which means that the penalty for them is prescribed by the Qur’an or by the Sunna (a word spoken, an act done, or a confirmation given by the Holy Prophet 68 In IHL, contractors who supply to the army are treated as POWs under Article 4(4) of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949.

69 In the 2009 edition, ta‘zir punishment under Section 8 was vested in the governor or the Imam or his deputy, depending on the rank of the captive. However, there was some overlap. Under Sections 20 and 21 of the same edition this authority was vested in the governor.
70 Section 10 covers the options available for dealing with members of the Afghan National Army, police, and other state personnel. Ta‘zir is not mentioned initially among the options but the end of the section says that only ‘the Imam, his deputy or the provincial qadi, are authorized to award the death sentence or ta‘zir’.
71 According to Ahnaf, there are only five hudud crimes. They are: sariqa (theft), haraba (highway robbery), zina (adultery/fornication), qadhaf (slander), and shorb al-khamar (drinking alcohol). Other Sunni schools of thought add two more to this list: ridda (apostasy) and baghi (transgression). Prosecution and punishment for hudud crimes are mandatory.
Muhammad (PBUH)). Ta’zir literally means deterrence; technically, it means the power of the qadi to award discretionary and variable punishment. Ta’zir offences are those that are not included in the other three categories. They comprise conduct that results in tangible and intangible individual social harm and for which the purpose of the penalty is to be corrective, and that is precisely the meaning of the word ta’zir. Penalties for ta’zir offences may be imprisonment, physical chastisement, compensation, or fines, or a combination of any two thereof. The prosecution and punishment of ta’zir offences are discretionary, as opposed to hudud, for which they are mandatory; and no ta’zir penalty can be greater than a hadd penalty. Qesas (retaliation/revenge/chastisement) crimes are not given a specific and mandatory definition or penalty in the Qur’an. However, the Qur’an refers to qesas in 2:178, 179; 5: 45; and 17:33. Its meaning and content are shaped by state legislation, judicial decisions, and legal doctrine.

In addition to the above punishments, the Imam or head of a Muslim state has the discretionary power of the sovereign, which enables him to apply Islamic law and to regulate, through legislation, some criminal justice, taxation, and police matters. These had not been under the control of the qadi (judge) in the early Abbasid times and were later given the name ‘syasa’. As explained in note 52, syasa literally means ‘policy’ and comprises the whole of administrative justice that is dispensed by the Imam and his political agents. This area of Islamic law has 75 Hans Wehr, A Dictionary of Modern Written Arabic, ed. J. Milton Cowan, Librairie Du Liban, Beirut, 1980, p. 766. Technically, qesas means that the accused be treated/punished the same way in which he treated/punished the victim: ‘so he is killed as he killed and is wounded as he wounded [the victim]’. Qesas is the punishment only for intentional homicide (qatl al-‘amd) and intentional wounding (jarh al-‘amd). See ‘Abdul Qadar ‘Awdah, Al-tasri’h al-jana’i al-Islami, 4th edition, Dar Ihya al-Turath al-Arabi, 1985, Vol. 1, p. 663.

76 The qesas crimes include murder, voluntary homicide, involuntary homicide, intentional crimes against the person, and unintentional crimes against the person. See ‘A. Q. ‘Awdah, above note 75, Vol. 1, pp. 663–668; and M. C. Bassiouni, above note 74, p. 270. Diya (blood-money) is the punishment for homicide or wounding with quasi-deliberate intent (shibb al-‘amd), i.e. an intentional act but without using a deadly implement. This includes the performance of expiation (kaffara) by the culprit and the payment of the ‘heavier blood-money’ (diya mughallaza) by his ‘aqila (which consists of all the male members of the culprit’s tribe and, if their number is not sufficient, the members of the nearest tribes; alternatively, of the fellow workers in his profession or his confederates). Diya is also the punishment for homicide or wounding by khata’ (mistake), for cases assimilated to mistake (ma ujriya mujra al-khata’), and for indirect homicide (qatl bi al-sabab). See, ‘A. Q. ‘Awdah, above note 75, Vol. 1, pp. 668–671. See also Joseph Schacht, An Introduction to Islamic Law, Universal Law Publishing Co., Delhi, 1997, pp. 181–186; M. A. Haleem, Omer Sherif, and Kate Daniels (eds), Criminal Justice in Islam, I. B. Tauris, London, New York, 2003, pp. 43–44. Details of qesas and diya are beyond the scope of this article.
77 Another term used instead of syasa was ‘nazar fil-mazalim’. The qadis have to follow the instructions given to them by the Imam in the exercise of his powers of syasa within the bounds set by the Shari’a (syasa al-shari’yyah). See J. Schacht, above note 76, p. 54. Under the concept of syasa, the sovereign may order the use of such procedural methods as he sees fit to discover where the truth lies. Moreover, apart from hudud offences, it is for the sovereign to determine what behaviour constitutes an offence and what not attracted serious scholarship, as authors do not give it enough space,78 but throughout Islamic legal history the head of the Muslim state has exercised some discretionary powers under syasa.79

Muslim jurists of all the four Sunni schools, the Shi’a schools, and their sub-schools have never prescribed ta’zir as the punishment for POWs. They did not even discuss it in their treatises on Islamic jus in bello. Ta’zir is only found in books or chapters on the Islamic criminal justice system, and the penalty for it is discretionary in nature, to be given by the judge. In the Layha, the ta’zir penalty is imposed by the Imam or his deputy or the (provincial) qadi, and a ta’zir punishment does not include the option of a ransom or fine.80 If ta’zir as a punishment is accepted for POWs (which, I have submitted, is wrong), then what has the Imam or his deputy to do with its application? The Layha has not only created a new category of punishment but also applies it in a new way. However, ta’zir as a punishment for POWs has no basis in Islamic law. In contrast, there does seem to be some basis for the application to a spy of ta’zir punishment either by the district or provincial qadi or by the provincial governor, which appears in Section 17 of the Layha.81 punishment is to be applied in each case. See N. J. Coulson, A History of Islamic Law, Universal Law Publishing Co, Delhi, 1997, p. 132.

78 However, see Saeed Hasan Ibrahim, ‘Basic principles of criminal procedure under Islamic Shari’a’, in Haleem et al., above note 76, p. 22.

79 Muslim jurists expounded the part of the Islamic legal system that was fixed and left the part that was flexible – changing with the times, according to the needs of the Muslim community – to the Imam (the head of the Islamic state). It is this function that the ruler carried out through a policy called ‘al-syasa al-shar’iyya’. A typical example given by Ahnaf of a syasa offence is the crime of apostasy. As discussed above, the fate of POWs is left to the Imam or head of the Muslim state. Similarly, Imam Sarkhasi (d. 483 AH/1090 CE) of the Hanafi school of thought, while commenting on the execution of a person by crushing his head between two stones because he had killed a handmaid in exactly the same way, argues that the Prophet (PBUH) punished him by way of syasa and that there was no mutilation because he had endangered the peace of the land and was a habitual criminal. See A. Sarkhasi, above note 46, Vol. 26, p. 128. The explanation when the Prophet (PBUH) executed a habitual thief who was previously given hadd punishment, but who deserved to be given a harsher punishment, is similar. See Abdur Rahman al-Nasai, Sunnan al-Nasai, Maktab Dar-ul-uloom, Lahore, Hadith No. 4892. For some interesting discussions of syasa, see Imran A. Nyazee, Theories of Islamic Law, IIIT & IRI, Islamabad, 1995, 2nd reprint, 2005, pp. 111–112. For works on syasa, see Ibn Taymiyya, al-Syasa Al-Shar’iyya, Dar al-Kutub Al-’Arabiya, Beirut, 1966, trans. Omar A. Farrukh, Ibn Taimiya on Public and Private Law in Islam, Khayats, Beirut, 1966; and Ibn Al-Qaim, Al-Turuq al-Hukmiya fi Al-Syasa Al-Shar’iyya, Matba’at Al-Sunnah Al-Muhamaddiya, n.d. M. K. Haykal, above note 14, does not discuss syasa al-shar’iyyah, despite its title; it does discuss almost all issues relating to jihad.

80 See Layha, Introduction, Section 2.

81 The rule seems to be in conformity with Islamic law. However, a person spying on the Taliban will probably be a person who at least knows their language. So only an Afghan or a Pashtun could do this job and not a foreign national. According to the Layha, only the Imam, his deputy, the provincial qadi, or the provincial governor can order the execution of the spy; see Section 17, p. 20. This section seems to be in conformity with Islamic law. Under Section 20, a person who is accused of spying but whose guilt could not be proved may be sent into exile. In Section 21, the Layha strictly prohibits the taking of photographs of any execution. This is in sharp contrast to the Taliban in the Swat Valley in Pakistan, who, during their control of the area in the summer of 2008, made videos of executions and circulate them accordingly. Moreover, under Section 22 of the Layha, the relatives of any person facing execution must be informed (p. 25). Other sections that are also grounded on Islamic law are the following: the disputes of people under the Taliban’s control must be resolved under Islamic law (Section 62); cases once decided must Legality of suicide attacks in the Layha

The Layha allows suicide attacks but there are certain conditions with which the mujahideen should comply. First, the suicide bomber should be trained very well to execute the mission. Second, suicide attacks should be carried out against high-value targets. Third, the killing of ordinary people and damage to property should be avoided as far as possible. Finally, all would-be suicide bombers must obtain permission and advice for suicide attacks from the provincial authority. This rule does not apply to those mujahideen who are given a ‘special programme and permission by the higher authority’. It is important to note that suicide attacks were also allowed in the 2009 edition with the same stipulations. Moreover, that same rule reveals that there are special agents who are given instructions by either Mullah Omar or his deputy to carry out suicide attacks or other types of attack.

One of the special features of the conduct of hostilities by non-state Islamic entities is that their tactics and strategies rely on methods and means specifically prohibited by both Islamic law and international humanitarian law. By relying on these methods and means, they cannot conduct warfare without intentionally committing criminal violations of Islamic law and of the Geneva Conventions (for which they seemingly care nothing). Among the worst of these violations is perfidy. In Islamic law, perfidy or treachery is to ‘breach the trust and the confidence of the enemy’, and the Prophet (PBUH) and his successors have strictly prohibited it without any exception. The Prophet (PBUH) is reported to have reiterated this ban on numerous occasions. In the eighth year after his migration to Medina, he issued commands to his departing army and said, ‘… Fight yet do not cheat, do not breach trust, do not mutilate, do not kill minors’. On another occasion, while instructing the army led by ‘Abd al-Rahman b. ‘Awf, he said: ‘… never commit breach of trust, nor treachery, nor mutilate anybody nor kill any minor or woman. This is the demand of God and the conduct of His Messenger for your guidance’. When Abu Jandal b. Suhayl (d. 18 AH/639 CE) fled to Medina from the polytheists of Mecca, he heard that the Prophet not be reopened (Section 63); the mujahideen should take extreme care not to harm someone’s person or property (in the areas under their control) and any violation must be punished accordingly (Section 63); the mujahideen are not permitted to let a minor who as yet has no beard to live with them (Section 69); mutilation is strictly prohibited (Section 70); the mujahideen are not allowed to collect usher, zakat, or other donations by force (Section 71); and finally, under Section 73, kidnapping for ransom ‘in the name of the Islamic Emirate’ is strictly prohibited. These provisions obviously apply in the areas under the control of the mujahideen.

Layha, Section 57, pp. 51–52. The Layha uses the terms ‘martyrdom attacks’ instead of ‘suicide attacks’, but how can a person be called a ‘shaheed’ (martyr) when he kills himself? A shaheed is a person killed by the enemy. In addition, the Layha uses the term ‘martyr mujahed’ for ‘suicide bomber’.

See Layha, 2009 edition, above note 64, Section 41.

For a detailed study of perfidy and ruse, see Muhammad Munir, ‘The conduct of the Prophet (PBUH) in war, with special reference to prohibited acts’, in Insights, forthcoming.

(PBUH) intended to return him to his people in execution of the Prophet’s (PBUH) covenant with the latter.\(^8\) Abu Jandal stood up among the Muslims and asked them if they would return him to the polytheists who would torture him to make him renounce Islam. The Prophet (PBUH) answered, ‘Treachery is not good for us, even to save a Muslim from the law of polytheists’\(^9\).

Islamic law considers any unilateral violation of a treaty by Muslims without first informing the other party to be an act of treachery. The other side must be given due notice of their intention, otherwise the Muslims will be committing perfidy. The Muslim state must abide by the terms of the treaty in letter and spirit. It is reported that the Ummayad Caliph Amir Mua’wiyyah was once preparing his army to attack the neighbouring Roman Empire, although the peace treaty between the two was still in force, for he wanted to attack as soon as it had expired. A Companion of the Prophet (PBUH), ‘Amr b. ‘Anbasah, considered it treachery to prepare for an attack without giving prior notification to the Romans. He therefore hastened to the Caliph shouting, ‘God is great, God is great, we should fulfil the pledge, we should not contravene it!’ The Caliph questioned him, whereupon he replied that he had heard the Prophet (PBUH) saying,

> If someone has an agreement with another community then there should be no [unilateral] alteration or change in it till its time is over. And if there is risk of a breach by the other side then give them notice of termination of the agreement on a reciprocal basis.\(^9\)

The Qur’anic verse says: ‘Or, if thou hast reason to fear treachery from people [with whom] thou hast made a covenant, cast it back at them in an equitable manner: for, verily, God does not love the treacherous’.\(^9\)

Shaybani considered it perfidy if a group of Muslims entered the enemy’s country feigning to be the representatives of the Caliph, whether or not they showed forged documents; in that case they were not allowed to kill anyone or take away any property as long as they were in the enemy’s state. Thus, if they were given protection, then they had to fulfil their obligations arising from that protection. Similarly, if Muslims pretend to be businessmen but are planning to murder someone, they are forbidden to kill, because they have been granted quarter by the enemy.\(^9\)

A suicide attack is a typical example here of perfidy or treachery, because the bomber feigns to be a civilian, and when he is taken to be a non-combatant and spared by the enemy’s soldiers, he blows himself up and kills them. Such an act is strictly prohibited in both Islamic law and IHL.93 Other examples of treachery or perfidy include engaging in combat while feigning non-combatant status, using non-combatants as shields, using ambulances to carry ammunitions or soldiers, pretending to surrender, feigning sickness, and feigning to be a civilian. As pointed out above, suicide attacks are strictly prohibited in Islamic law, and a suicide bomber might be committing at least five crimes according to Islamic law: killing civilians, mutilating their bodies, violating the trust of enemy soldiers and civilians, committing suicide,94 and destroying civilian property.95

Notably, while the Layha prohibits mutilation of dead bodies,96 by allowing suicide attacks it allows live persons to be mutilated, disfigured, or burnt. Killing in such a way is strictly prohibited in Islamic law. Some scholars argue that suicide attacks are allowed in some situations but not in others. Sheikh Qaradawi, for instance, initially allowed suicide attacks in the occupied territories (Palestine)97 but has subsequently disallowed them.98

It may be argued that suicide attacks against non-Muslim enemy belligerents occupying Muslim territory, which is the case in Afghanistan, are not forbidden in Islamic law. Before responding to this claim, it is necessary to explain what types of suicide attack Islamic law prohibits in war. The prohibited types of suicide attack include those when a suicide bomber pretends to be a civilian but is wearing a suicide jacket under his civilian outfit and targets combatants or civilians. As already stated, such an attack is an act of perfidy. When the bomber is openly wearing his combat outfit, it might be very difficult even to get close enough to the enemy to carry out such an attack.99 Yet if suicide attacks by persons posing as civilians are allowed against occupying forces because they occupy Muslim 93 See Article 37(1) of Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), 8 June 1977. Perfidy is defined as ‘acts inviting the confidence of an adversary to lead him to believe that he is entitled to, or is obliged to accord, protection under the rules of international law applicable in armed conflict, with intent to betray that confidence’. 94 Committing suicide is strictly prohibited in Islamic law. Suicide in Islamic law is intentional self-murder by the believer. There is a hadith qudsi – a statement of the Prophet (PBUH) ascribed to God himself – in which he says that a wounded man takes his own life. God then says, ‘My servant anticipated my action by taking his soul (life) in his own hand; therefore, he will not be admitted to paradise’. See Isma’il Al-Bukhari, Sahih Bukhari, Dar Sahnun, Istanbul, 1992, Vol. 3, p. 32. In another saying of the Prophet (PBUH), he has given a stern warning to a person committing suicide, stating that the wrongdoer would be repeating the suicidal act endlessly in hell and would reside in hell for ever. Ibid., Vol. 3, p. 212. 95 For details, see M. Munir, above note 61. 96 Layha, Section 70. 97 Y. Qaradawi, above note 12, Vol. 2, p. 1092. 98 Sheikh Qaradawi argues that, since the Palestinians have obtained missiles that can hit Israel, martyrdom operations are no longer allowed (ibid., p. 1092). If the same argument is applied in Afghanistan, where (1) the Taliban are so strong that for almost ten years the world’s strongest and most well-equipped army has been unable to defeat them and (2) the Taliban possess more sophisticated weapons than the Palestinians, then the use of suicide attacks as a method of warfare should be strictly prohibited. One possibility is when such a soldier pretends to be surrendering and, on approaching the enemy, blows himself up. But this again is perfidy, and in the future soldiers who genuinely wanted to surrender would not be trusted by the enemy.

territory, it would mean that the principles of Islamic jus in bello are applicable only when Muslims conquer and occupy non-Muslim territories, and not when Muslim territory is occupied. This is unacceptable.

The Taliban’s law on suicide attacks asks the bombers to avoid civilian casualties and damage to civilian property. But this cannot be considered as compliance with the principle of distinction between combatants and civilians under Islamic law or IHL, for it is violated in Section 81 of the Layha, which urges the fighters to resemble the local population in their outward appearance: they should keep their ‘hair style, clothing, shoes and other things just like the local people [because] this will allow the mujahideen to protect the local people and will enable them to move freely in any direction’. It is clear that this provision is contrary to the principle of distinction. It destroys the credibility of genuine civilians because the adversary’s trust is broken, and exposes the genuine civilian population to attacks.

Conclusion

The Taliban’s claim that they are the mujahideen (holy warriors) of the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan obviously suggests that they must abide by the rules of Islamic law on the conduct of hostilities. The Layha, the code of conduct for their fighters, highlights the limiting of suicide attacks, avoiding civilian casualties, and winning the battle for the hearts and minds of the local civilian population: ‘A brave son of Islam should not be used for lower and useless targets. Utmost effort should be made to avoid civilian casualties’.

In terms of limiting the effects of war, banning some forms of torture, and ruling out non-discrimination based on tribal origin, language, or geographical 101 Section 81 of the Layha corresponds to Section 63 of the 2009 edition. It is clearly very questionable whether disguising the Taliban to look like the locals will protect them (the locals) or will expose them to danger.

102 In most cases, non-state actors do not in fact comply with the principle of distinction that was stressed by the Prophet (PBUH) and his successors in their wars. See Muhammad Munir, ‘The protection of women and children in Islamic law and international humanitarian law: a critique of John Kelsay’, in Hamdard Islamicus, Vol. 25, No. 3, July–September 2002, pp. 69–82; and Muhammad Munir, ‘Non-combatant immunity in Islamic law’, under review for possible publication in Journal of Islamic Law and Culture. According to a fatwa (legal ruling) issued on 23 February 1998 by the so-called ‘World Islamic Front’ – a group consisting of Osama bin Laden and four other persons representing Islamic militant groups in Egypt, Pakistan, and Bangladesh – ‘Killing the Americans and their allies – civilian and military – is an individual obligation for any Muslim who can do so in any country …’. In addition, the fatwa urges Muslims ‘to kill Americans and plunder their money wherever and whenever they find it’. Available at: http://www.fas.org/irp/world/para/docs/980223-fatwa.htm (last visited 22 December 2010). The original fatwa is undated but was published on 23 February 1998 in Al-Quds al-Arabi, London edition, p. 3, available at: http://www.library.cornell.edu/colldev/mideast/fatw2.htm (last visited 22 December 2010). This injunction is contrary to Islamic jus in bello.

103 Layha, Section 57(2, 3).
background, the Layha may be said to show respect for some fundamental humanitarian rules. However, many rules contained in it have no basis either in Islamic law or in international humanitarian law and may even contradict both of them. The rules on the possible execution of POWs, the punishment of contractors, suppliers, and drivers, and the introduction of ta‘zir as a punishment for captives at the discretion of the judge for common criminals who cannot be punished under hudud, qesas, or syasa are examples of rules that cannot be found in Islamic law. Conversely, the unconditional release of POWs, the exchange of POWs, and the prohibition of mutilation are based on Islamic law. The acts of perfidy allowed by the Layha as methods for the conduct of hostilities – such as attacks in which a suicide bomber feigns civilian status – are to be considered perfidy in both divine law and humanitarian law. Rules that combatants should wear the same clothes and shoes and style their hair in the same way as the local people, so as not to be identified by the enemy, violate the principle of distinction between combatants and civilians and endanger the civilian population. There are many provisions in the Layha that are based on Islamic law, such as the requirement that disputes between people (under the mujahideen’s control) should be settled according to Islamic law, the prohibition on harming someone’s person or property, the prohibition of the use of force in collecting usher, zakat, or donations, and the prohibition of kidnapping for ransom, but these are for the administration of areas under the mujahideen’s control and not elsewhere.

Thus, the present Layha contains many provisions of Islamic law as far as administrative control by mujahideen is concerned. However, many rules in the Layha regarding the conduct of hostilities cannot be said to be based on pure Islamic law. Islam is used more as rhetoric to serve as a source of unity and to mobilize, not as a guarantee for compliance with the Islamic law of war.

The mujahideen have to behave well and show proper treatment to the nation, in order to bring the hearts of civilian Muslims closer to them.104 If this declared aim is to be accomplished in due respect for Islamic law, the code of conduct must abide by Islamic law and the principles of international humanitarian law. The various changes in the Layha over the last few years show that there is room for improvement in the search for compliance with those principles and above all with the divine law. In sum, the Layha has an ambitious goal to set out principles in accordance with Islamic law and give it a religious sanction, but unfortunately it falls short.

The Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan. The Laiha [Code of Conduct] For Mujahids*

Translator’s Note
The Laiha is the code of conduct (manual) and regulations of the Mujahids of the Islamic Emirate. The following document is the second edition of the Laiha, published in 2010. It has been originally written in Pashto and translated into English for informational use by the International Committee of the Red Cross. This is not an official translation. Readers will find the original text on: http://alemarah-iea.net/index.php?option=com_content&view=category&id=9&Itemid=24. The first Laiha was published in 2006. This Code of Conduct replaces the 2009 version.

Our aim has been to preserve the spirit of the original Pashto text. Therefore, deviations from the original structure of the articles and paragraphs have been kept to a minimum and made only when necessary in preserving the sense. The translator’s clarifications are shown by square brackets […], while explanations of some words or phrases are shown in parentheses (…). English equivalents of names, titles, epithets and notions in Islamic theology have been regularized. The meanings of most Islamic judicial notions referred to in the text are given in footnotes. We have followed the Pashto–Russian dictionary of M.G. Aslanov in the transliteration of Arabic and Pashto words.

In the name of God
(Who is) the most gracious and the most merciful,
We praise and pray for the glorious Messenger.

There after: Allah Almighty says [in the Holy Book]:

Allah doth command you to render back your Trusts to those to whom they are due; And when ye judge between man and man, that ye judge with justice: Verily how excellent is the teaching which He giveth you! For Allah is He Who heareth and seeth all things (58).

O ye who believe! Obey Allah, and obey the Messenger, and those charged with authority among you. If ye differ in anything among yourselves, refer it to Allah and His Messenger, if ye do believe in Allah and the Last Day: That is best, and most suitable for final determination (59).

Striving [Jihad] in the way of Almighty Allah is the highest worship and greatest duty through which the honour of the Islamic Ummah and the sublimation of the expression of Allah Almighty takes place. Jihad is a fundamental tool for the success and magnificence of the Muslims through which the dignity and happiness of the Islamic Ummah can be secured. The nations who have carried out Jihad enjoy independence and free life. By contrast, the nations which have sheathed the sword and abandoned Jihad have not received any benefits apart from having been shackled to the neck by the chains of slavery and captivity. Today, while the Mujahids are giving their sacred blood for the prestige of Allah’s word, for the honour of their own Muslim nation and the Islamic Ummah, in order to be able to organize Jihad affairs in the light of a comprehensive Jihad strategy and to guide Mujahids in terms of administrative, educational, judicial, moral and ethical aspects of life more than ever before, there is a need [for us] to have such a Laiha [Code of Conduct], which will enable Mujahids to better clarify their aim; to identify the intentions of the enemies of Islam and their supporters; and to easily find a solution for the doubts and vagueness which they are facing in a Jihad environment. In accordance with the divine guidelines, the duties should be given to those God-fearing and brave [persons] who are not only capable of carrying out their duties in a good way, but also able to neutralize the enemy’s conspiracy in time.

Thanks to the favour and support of God Almighty, the Leadership of the Islamic Emirate, in order to implement the demand of the moment, has been able to compile the Laiha and the Regulations into 14 chapters and 85 articles in the light of Mohammedan Sharia and through the assistance and advice given by the prominent and erudite theologians [ulema], chief judges [muftis], specialists and knowledgeable persons of the country.

[The Leadership of the Islamic Emirate] based on the assistance of the mentioned persons and taking into account the current situation has added some issues to the second edition [The Code of Conduct and the Regulations] and has elaborated on some matters and introduced some clarifications.

2 Religious community.
After the publication of the second edition, every person in charge and every Mujahid of the Islamic Emirate has a responsibility and duty in terms of obeying [the rules of] this Laiha and its implementation.

All military and administrative authorities as well as ordinary Mujahids of the Islamic Emirate in matters of Jihad affairs are bound to all principles of this Laiha and obliged to organise their daily Jihad activities in the light of the regulations of this Code of Conduct.

Vassalam³, 1431 lunar year of the Hegira system, 15 of Jumadi al Thani 2010.05.29 1389.03.08

Introduction

1. In the Laiha [Code of Conduct], Imam and Najib Imam⁴ refer to the Respected Amir ul Momineen⁵ Mullah Mohammad Omar (Mujahid) and his deputy, respectively.
2. In the text of the Laiha, whenever [the situation of] giving punishment to somebody is mentioned it does not include the collection of money.
3. In the articles of the Laiha, whenever the taking of guarantees is mentioned, it refers only to unmovable properties and persons. It does not refer to money or movable property.
4. The second edition of the Laiha was published and went into affect on the 15th of Jumadi al Thani, 1431 lunar year of the Hegira system which corresponds to the 8th of Jauza, 1389 solar year of the Hegira system and to the 29th of May, 2010 year of Christian era. Mujahids and persons in charge of the Islamic Emirate are obliged to implement this Code of Conduct.

Chapter 1 – Issues related to the surrender of the oppositionists and giving them dawat⁶ [invitation]

1. Any Muslim can give a dawat [invitation] to the employees of the Kabul servant administration in order to encourage them to leave their duties in this corrupted administration and to sever their ties with it.
2. If somebody is leaving this corrupted administration because of somebody’s dawat, or because of his own faith, then in the case of the ordinary person the district chief shall give a letter of permission to him, and in any case of a well-known person or a person who has inflicted harm on Muslims, the district chief shall provide such a letter after consultation with the governor and shall inform the Mujahids about the letter. If any Mujahid will kill the person or cause any harm to him, the person who committed this act shall be given punishment in the light of Islamic principles.

⁶ To draw in, to attract to the right way.

3. Regarding those persons who have surrendered and repented during their period in power (while working with Infidels or their slavery administration), if they harmed someone or caused harm to someone’s property, then this person is obliged by Allah Almighty to make amends. If he does not, then he is [considered] guilty. Of course, the court or somebody else cannot receive a compensation or fine for the crime by force, nor can they punish him. If a person took some else’s property and are still in possession of it, then the real owners of the property can take it back from this person, but if the property is no longer in their possession, then the real owners cannot take compensation by force [from the person]. If a person during his period in power has accumulated debts or made deals such as purchasing and selling on good faith [of both parties concerned] and is still in debt [towards one of the parties concerned], then the debt can be recovered. If somebody asks for the court to be convened regarding such a personal matter, then the individual concerned should attend the court. Of course, if any thefts have taken place, or one tribe has attacked another tribe, village, household, shop, vehicle or anything else, or has committed murder or has taken a property, in this case a trial and compensation are applicable.

4. If a person does not stand on his promise and carries out obvious treachery after accepting the dawat [invitation] or calling, the promise given to him is invalidated. In the case of a second surrender or repenting [of the person], if Mujahids are not sure of his sincerity, then a guarantee shall be asked from him.

5. If a person, having been linked to the current corrupted administration and accused of murdering Muslims, or that Muslims hate him and feel an aversion towards him, or is departing from the ranks of the opposite side, then the Mujahids shall ask this person for a guarantee that he will not change his mind and will not inflict harm on anybody. The person in question shall lead his ordinary life, but those responsible in the district are obliged to watch and follow up on him until gaining full trust and confidence in him.

In case an important operation is conducted and the person in question kills a foreign invader or a high ranking government official, or provides the Mujahids with the opportunity to catch them alive, he could be nominated to the leadership and may receive additional privileges.

6. As regards those persons who depart from the inferior administration and surrender to Mujahids, they should not be included into the Mujahid ranks without consultations among the Mujahids and until they gain full confidence in those... persons. After gaining such confidence, the permission shall be obtained from the person responsible for the province.

7. If any armed person from the opposite side leaves his unit and goes to a place where he cannot defend himself and the circumstances look like this person would like to surrender, any attempt to kill him would be unlawful until [the moment] it becomes clear that he does not have any intention of surrendering and will continue to attack and deceive.

8. If somebody from the opposite side contacts a Mujahid to say that he will be at the service of Mujahids inside the opposition’s ranks, and that for this [service] he and his [military] squad or group of his Mujahids should not cause the person any troubles, in case of such a contact, Mujahids have permission to grant him this particular security. They should not give him general security guarantees though. In case of such a contact, the Mujahid should seek permission from the person responsible in the district who, in turn, should request permission from the governor. Given the fact that it will be personal security guarantees given to a particular person by a particular person or group, other Mujahids will not have any responsibility in case of any killing or harm done [to the security given to that particular person].

Chapter 2 – About prisoners

9. When an enemy, regardless of whether they are a local or a foreigner is captured, he will be handed over immediately to the person responsible in the province. After the handover it is at the discretion of the person responsible for the province whether to keep him [captive] with the particular Mujahids [those who captured him] or to hand him over to others.

10. If a local soldier, policeman, an official or other responsible person with affiliations to the slave administration has been captured, it is at the discretion of the governor to release them in the case of prisoners exchange, as part of a goodwill gesture or in exchange of solid guaranties. Receiving money for the prisoner’s release is forbidden. Only Imam, Najib Imam and the provincial judge have the authority to execute or to punish. Nobody else has this authority. If a judge has not been appointed yet in a province it is up to the person responsible in the province to decide the fate [of a prisoner] with regard to their execution or punishment.

11. In case of the capture of contractors who transport and supply fuel, equipment or other materials for the infidels and their slave administration, as well as those who build military centres for them and those high- and low-ranking employees of security companies, interpreters of the infidels and drivers involved in enemy supply [business], if a judge proves the fact that the aforementioned persons are indeed involved in such activities, they should be punished by death. If the judge has not been appointed yet in a province it is up to the person responsible in the province to decide the fate [of a person] with regard to the issues of proof and execution.

12. If a military infidel has been captured, his execution, release through prisoner exchange, intentional release or release upon payment in case the Muslims need money, is at the discretion of the Imam and Najib Imam. No one else has of the authority to make this decision. If the captive becomes Muslim, the Imam or Najib Imam has the authority to release him in a prisoner exchange, provided that there will be no danger of his becoming an infidel again.

13. If the Mujahids capture prisoners and, during transportation to their [Mujahids’] military centres, encounter a threat and are unable to take the captives to a safe place, and if the captives are people of the opposite side who have been captured during the war or who are officials of the opposite side, then the Mujahids present can kill them [the captives]. However, if they do not belong to these groups of people and there are doubts about the prisoners’ status and they have not been identified yet or have been captured in relation to juridical [legal] issues, then the Mujahids are not authorized to kill them even if there is no option but to leave the captives at the scene.

14. If a policeman or soldier will surrender to the Mujahids and repent, the Mujahids are not allowed to kill him. If the policeman or soldier has a weapon with him, or if he had accomplished any great deeds, the Mujahids should express endearment towards him.

15. Mujahids should not expose those detained by them to starvation, thirst, cold or heat even if they deserve death. The Mujahids should punish the detained persons in accordance with the decision provided by Sharia concerning them, whether that would entail execution or any other type of punishment.

16. Apart from the Imam, Najib Imam and the judge nobody has the right to issue a ta’zir punishment. If a district judge, without the presence of the provincial judge, should issue the ta’zir execution punishment, the district judge should receive permission from the provincial judge. However, in those provinces where the provincial judge has not been appointed yet, any determination on execution and issues related to ta’zir punishment shall be at the discretion of the governor.

Chapter 3 – About spies

17. If evidence of espionage is found regarding a person he will be considered as a perpetrator of social destruction. The provincial judge and district judge and, in case of their absence the person responsible for the province, has the authority to issue the ta’zir punishment. The Imam, Najib Imam, provincial judge and – in case of the absence of the judge – the governor have the authority to execute [kill] the arrested spy. No one else can pass a decision to execute him.

9 ‘Ta’zir’ – punishment not provided in the Sharia, but determined by the judge himself.
18. Whenever a person has been categorized as a perpetrator of social destruction it is obligatory that it be proven in accordance with the four points below.

FIRST: the person willingly confesses his espionage, without any coercive force applied against him.
SECOND: two witnesses give testimonies regarding the espionage and the testimonies given by them should be reliable before the judge.
THIRD: circumstantial evidence (documents) raises strong suspicion, such as specific tools (equipment) used by spies for the purpose of spying and other such evidence.

Of course, not every one can assess the circumstantial evidence. If the court is available, the judge, and if it’s not available, a specialist – an efficient and pious person – shall examine the strong and weak [aspects] of the circumstantial evidence. If the circumstantial evidence is [found] weak then the ta’zir punishment shall be reduced and if the circumstantial evidence is [found] strong then the punishment shall be strengthened. If the circumstantial evidence is strong enough for a firm conviction [unshakable confidence], and if the Imam, Najib Imam and judge have determined that execution [killing] is appropriate, then they can execute him.

FOURTH: a person who is eligible to be a witness is someone who is very just [fair], without fanaticism [prejudice], who keeps himself far from Kabair [Grave sins] and never prolongs [when committed] the Saghair [Minor sins].

19. A confession obtained through [the means of] coercion, namely beating, threatening, suffering [torture] is not valid and cannot be used to prove the crime. The person who is taking a confession should be religious and bright [quick on the uptake] in order to prevent the use of coercion (force) when taking a confession because, in [accordance with] Sharia, a confession obtained though coercive force is untrustworthy and invalid. During confession, the Mujahids should not make promises to a prisoner, which they have no intention to fulfil.

However, it is not sufficient to merely take confessions or testimonies from a spy concerning other people. In this case those four points mentioned in article 18 shall be applicable and any actions shall be taken in light of them.

20. If Mujahids have concerns and doubts about a person suspected of spying and his crime has not been proven completely in accordance with the principles of the Sharia, the district chief in consultation with qualified people\(^\text{10}\) can exile the person from the area to a place where there will be no threat [to his life] and he will be safe. Another option would be taking from the suspect a solid guarantee. A solid guarantee means that trusted people from the respective area or who are sympathetic with the suspect will guarantee that the suspect will behave appropriately. Unmovable property might also be given as a guarantee such that, if the person starts spying again or commits another harmful act and escapes, he will not be able to use it.

21. If a criminal deserves death and an execution verdict has been issued against him in accordance with Sharia [by the court], he should be executed by gun, regardless of whether he is a spy or otherwise. Taking pictures of the executed person is prohibited.

22. Given the fact that many Sharia regulations are linked to the death of a human being, in case the Mujahids have executed a person sentenced to death without his relatives having been informed, the Mujahids should use to all possible means they consider appropriate in order to inform the heirs of the executed person about the date of execution.

Chapter 4 – Regarding those who carry out supply and construction activities for the enemy

23. It is lawful to burn private cars which transport materials or which carry out other services for the Infidels. However, trading cars for money or using them is prohibited.

24. Regarding drivers who are captured while transporting the Infidels’ materials, if Mujahids are confident that [the drivers] were indeed transporting materials [goods] for the infidels and their slave administration, then the drivers should be killed and their means of transportation should be burned. In case a person is in captivity, and if the judge is convinced that these persons are indeed involved in this business [materials transportation for the infidels and their slave administration] then the judge should give them a death punishment. Of course, in case a province has not yet had its judge appointed, the matters related to proof and execution shall be transferred to the governor.

25. As far as these contractors (leaseholders) are concerned, those who are involved in activities such as construction of centres [bases] for the infidels and their slave administration as well as transportation of fuel or other materials for them, the Mujahids should burn down their transportation means and kill them [leaseholders, contractors].

In case such a person is in captivity, and if the judge is convinced that the person is indeed involved in such activities, then the judge should give them a death punishment. Of course, in case a province has not yet had its judge appointed, the matters related to proof and execution shall be transferred to the governor.

26. If it is clear that contractors are involved in the finding of labour workers and other workers for activities on behalf of the opposite side and they are doing their patronage as well, these contractors should be killed.

Chapter 5 – About spoils [trophy]

27. Spoils [trophy] refer to the goods that are captured during a fight with the combatant infidels. In Afghanistan, a one-fifth portion of the spoils will be deposited with the person responsible in the province, who will use the spoils in the Khums\textsuperscript{11} [fifth part] expenditures in accordance with instructions given by the leadership. Four parts of the spoils will belong to the Mujahids who were present at the scene or their commander if he was despatched somewhere to set the trap, for information gathering or other matters related to the particular fighting. Four parts of the spoils may also be distributed among those who meet the following two conditions:

FIRST: those, who are close enough to the field of operation that in case of need they can go there and help.

SECOND: those who are willing and ready to take part in the operation and are in contact with the fighting Mujahids. For example, thief a commander deploys him [or them] at a site close to the battlefield saying that if required he will call them to join the operation.

Those who do meet the above-mentioned criteria will not be entitled to the spoils.

28. The commanders of Mujahids should write down the names \[and other Identity information\] of the Mujahids in order to use this information while distributing the spoils and in case of capture or martyrdom of the Mujahids and for other needs.

29. If the Mujahids will fight [war] in a village and the villagers also take part in the fighting, then they are entitled to a share in the spoils, and if they do not participate, then they are not entitled.

30. If a Mujahid becomes a martyr before the end of the fighting then he is not entitled to a share in the spoils. Of course, the Mujahids should show kindness to him and give him a share. If he becomes a martyr on the battlefield or after the ending of the war then he is entitled to a share of the spoils and his part shall be given to his heirs.

31. The money or materials \[goods and other valuables\] taken from foreign invaders in the result of fighting [war] are considered as spoils. If they are taken by the Mujahids without any fighting, then they are considered as Fay\textsuperscript{12}, and go to the Public Treasury\textsuperscript{13}.

32. If Mujahids seize materials from the slave administration as a result of fighting, then the leadership permits it to be divided as spoils. If the materials are taken without fighting, then they should be sent to the Public Treasury in order to be used for the general needs of the Mujahids.

33. Money which has been taken from a common treasury (a bank) and is in the possession of a reliable person who has not yet distributed it among labourers and employees, shall be divided as spoils if it was obtained through fighting [war]. If it was seized without fighting, then it shall be considered as Public Treasury. However, if the money has already been delivered to the employees and labourers, then these employees and labourers shall be considered as owners [of the money]. The Imam, judge and the person responsible in the province can issue a ta’zir punishment to these individuals but cannot take their money from them. The same applies for the wages received by the workers of organizations [NGOs].

Chapter 6 – Regarding organisational structure

34. The persons responsible in the provinces are obliged to create a commission at the provincial level comprised of qualified members. The members must not number less than five. The provincial commission, along with each district chief and with the agreement of the person responsible in the province, should organise such commissions at the district level. A maximum of three members of the district commission and a minimum three members of the provincial commission should be present in the field [area] of their activities. The leaders and members of both commissions should be those persons who will not have an excuse to leave the area of their activities.

35. In those districts where the activities of the Mujahids of the Islamic Emirate are obvious and visible, a person in charge should be appointed as a district chief. Following the agreement reached with the higher-ranking responsible persons, the district chief should appoint a person as a deputy for public[^14] affairs, who would not have much involvement in military affairs. This person should have a certain [level of] knowledge about public affairs and should be experienced with good manners and moral values, so that people can easily access him.

36. The creation of new groups and [military] squads is prohibited. In case of urgent need, the person responsible in the province can request the Leadership’s permission, following an agreement of the organizing director[^15]. Unofficial and self-organized [military] squads should join bigger groups through the governor. If they refuse to join and disobey, they should be disarmed.

37. The spokespersons of the Islamic Emirate are appointed by the Leadership, following suggestions from the relevant administration. They will be the representatives of the whole Islamic Emirate. No one else is allowed to talk with the media on behalf of provinces, groups or individuals. Obeying this rule will prevent disorder, confusion and disunity.

38. Each person responsible in the province should set up a Sharia court at the provincial level, comprising one judge and two prominent theologians who will solve complicated issues at the provincial level which seem to be difficult to solve for theologians and those responsible at the district and village levels. The governor

[^14]: It also could be interpreted as civilian affairs.

[^15]: ‘Tanzima rais’ in the Pashto version is the person responsible for the coordination of the organizational and administrative activities in a given zone.
should present a proposition to the Leadership in order to receive an approval for the [proposed] judge and members of the court.

39. The organizing director can bring changes in the organisational structure of the province upon consultation with the governor. The governor can bring changes in the organisational structure of the district upon consultation with the district chief. However, if the governor and district chief cannot reach a common view after consultation, the governor will refer the issue to the organizing director. If the governor and the organizing director do not reach an agreement, the organizing director will present the issue to the Leadership. The provincial commission can change a district chief after [conducting] thorough investigation and receiving permission from the organizing director and the person responsible in the province.

Chapter 7 – Internal matters of Mujahids

40. It is compulsory for the Mujahids to obey their [military] squad leader; for the squad leader to obey the district leader; for the district leader to obey the provincial leader; for the provincial leader to obey the organizing director and for the organizing director to obey the Imam and Najib Imam as long as it is rightful under the Sharia.

41. Anyone who is appointed as a person with responsibility must have the following characteristics: Inventiveness, piety, courage, compassion, and generosity. If none [of the candidates] have all these characteristics, then at least inventiveness and piety are required.

42. The military commission, in order to secure progress in military affairs, has a duty to prepare plans [of action] taking into account the might [abilities] of the Mujahids of every area as well as the geography of the area, and to apply and share successful techniques and experiences with the Mujahids. In case of increasing enemy pressure in a province, the Military commission should prepare a programme for the Mujahids of neighbouring and other provinces in order to disperse the enemy’s might and decrease the pressure in a particular area. The commission should present [such] programmes for consultation at the level of the Leadership, and after receiving the Leadership’s approval should pass an order to the provinces to proceed [with the programme].

43. The military commission should be aware of the Mujahids’ situation [conditions] in all provinces and should know capable and effective Mujahids in order to introduce them to the Leadership for a better supply or reward.

44. Given the fact that the majority of the members of the Military commission are military commanders, it will be difficult for them to assemble in one place. Therefore, in case of need, as many members [of the commission] as possible can assemble and continue their work. In addition, it is up to the commission responsible to organize the commission [internal activities] in a way that will prevent delays and problems in work.
45. The Military commission will ask the persons responsible in the provinces to present information about their procedures [performance] and activities and to send from time to time its delegations to the provinces in order to encourage the Mujahids, to ensure progress in military affairs, to strengthen [the situation] and to collect information.

46. In order to tackle public\textsuperscript{16} and judicial issues, article 62 of the \textit{Layha} shall be applicable. In case of any matters arising between the common people\textsuperscript{17} and Mujahids, or between Mujahids themselves, the resolution of which is a prerogative of the provincial or district commission, the provincial commission should agree with the governor and the district commission should agree with the district chief or his deputy. The commissions should listen attentively to the explanations of the parties concerned and if the provincial commission is unable to resolve the matter, then it should be addressed to the military commission. The military commission should choose a peaceful resolution. If it still fails to resolve the matter, it should then present the issue to the Leadership. The Leadership shall resolve it through the respective structures [boards] or through [the assistance of] the theologians. If a commission\textsuperscript{18} has made a decision, then the announcement should be made in the presence of both parties concerned.

47. The provincial and district commissions, along with their other duties, should monitor [the situation] in order to prevent the infiltration of bad people into the ranks of Mujahids. If such persons are identified, they should be reported to the governor. The commissions shall do their best to resolve contradictions [disputes] between Mujahids and between common people and Mujahids. The commissions shall observe the implementation of all decrees and regulations of the Islamic Emirate. The commission shall do its best to draw attention of violators [to their mistakes] and to correct [their behaviour]. In case the behaviour goes uncorrected, those persons should be reported to the governor.

48. If common people or Mujahids have an issue with a member of the military commission or provincial or district commission or with his comrades and the resolution of the issue is entrusted to a commission of which the mentioned person is a member, then the person should not participate in the gatherings dedicated to the resolution of this particular issue.

49. The provincial commission is obliged to organize the members of the commission in a way that once per month they will guide the Mujahids in terms of obedience, piety and moral values and will monitor their conduct.

50. If a Mujahid has committed a crime or has violated the \textit{Layha} repeatedly and the [military] squad leader or district chief decides to withdraw him from the ranks [of Mujahids] because of the committed crime, [in this situation] the leader should forward the case of the criminal to the provincial commission. The provincial commission should thoroughly investigate the issue and in case the crime indeed

\begin{itemize}
\item[16] Civilian or issues related to the common people.
\item[17] Civilians.
\item[18] Any mentioned commission.
\end{itemize}
\end{footnotesize}
deserves expulsion, the provincial commission shall make a decision after receiving an agreement from the governor. After this, nobody will have a right to arm and equip the expelled person. If the person has repented [of the committed crime], then he can be given a duty with the agreement of the provincial commission and the governor.

If the above-mentioned person is a leader of the [military] squad, district chief, district deputy chief or another responsible person, his case should be forward to the military commission via the governor or provincial commission. The Military commission has the authority to try to correct [the behavior of the person], to summoned him, to advise him and to warn him. If after all [the person] did not correct [his conduct], then the commission should introduce him to the Leadership in order to assess his disarming or expelling from the ranks [of Mujahids]. In case he repents, he can be given a duty again, but [in such situations] the approval of the Military commission or governor is required.

51. The persons responsible at the provincial and the district levels, depending on the conditions in the area, should hold consultations at an appropriate time with respective responsible [persons] about operations conducted, actions, achievements and shortcomings in order to be able to prepare more successful strategies in the future and to spare the Mujahids from [possible] harm.

52. If a [military] squad leader in one district or province wants to carry out Jihad in another province or district, he can do it. However, he needs permission from the [persons] responsible in the respective province or district. The persons responsible for the respective province or district will be his superior. He should be fully obedient to the person in charge [of the area].

53. If any governor or other leader already has an active group or [military] squad in another province, he should introduce the relevant squad and Mujahids to the person responsible for the relevant province. After this, they will be obedient to the governor of the relevant area and will follow his instructions [when executing their duties]. The person responsible in the province will provide them with logistic supplies as they do for the other Mujahids of the province. In the structure of the Islamic Emirate, united front lines are prohibited. These front lines, Mahaz, are not part of the organisational structure of the Emirate.

54. If a military squad leader from a particular province is giving his assistance to the persons responsible for another province with regard to Jihad affairs and afterwards wants to continue to carry out Jihad in that place, the person responsible in the province should seek accurate information and agreement from the person responsible in the province of origin [of the group leader] before accepting him and giving him a place. Moreover, [the person responsible in the province] should ask a newcomer about the reason behind his decision to leave the previous province and to come to a new one. If the reason does not contradict Sharia, then the person could be accepted.

55. A military squad leader who would like to increase the members of his squad or group cannot invite Mujahids who belong to another squad. Of course, if a Mujahid wants to join another responsible [group leader], he can do it. However,
Jihad tools given to him by the previous military squad leader in order to serve Jihad, or those tools which were seized by common effort and for which the squad’s property right has been established, shall be returned to the previous squad leader. If an item was given to him as spoils or was obtained as a personal belonging, he can take it with him.

56. Those valiant warrior¹⁹ Mujahids who are entering the enemy centre in order to conduct a group armed attack should consider the following points:

1. These valiant warrior Mujahids should receive a good training and each of them should be given particular tasks.
2. These valiant warrior Mujahids should be very well supplied and equipped in order to be able to resist for a long time and inflict a lot of damage on the enemy.
3. The Mujahids and their leaders should receive in advance full information and understanding about the area they are going to attack.

57. Regarding martyrdom attacks, the four following points should be considered:

   FIRST: A martyr Mujahid should be well-trained prior to the attack.
   SECOND: A martyrdom attack should be used for important and high-value targets. The self-sacrificing heroes of the Islamic Ummah must not be used for low and worthless targets.
   THIRD: In martyrdom attacks, much more care should be taken to prevent the deaths and injuries of common people.
   FOURTH: Apart from those Mujahids who received an individual programme and permission from the Leadership, all other Mujahids must receive permission and instructions from the person responsible in the province before carrying out martyrdom attacks.

58. The general commissions of the Islamic Emirate shall hold from time to time consultative meetings in order to be more successful and advanced on matters under their responsibility.

Chapter 8 – Regarding education and training

59. The educational and training activities within the structure of the Islamic Emirate should be carried out according to the programme and regulations of the Education commission. The persons responsible in the provinces and districts shall conduct their educational efforts in accordance with the strategy of the above-mentioned commission.

¹⁹ ‘Mubariz’ in the Pashto version, this word could be also translated as a brave soldier, fighter for a cause (for instance, fighter for national liberation).
Chapter 9 – Regarding control and regulation of organizations [NGOs] and companies

60. The persons responsible in the provinces shall deal with organizations [NGOs] and companies in accordance with the instructions issued by the Commission for Control and Regulation of Organizations [NGOs] and Companies. However, the commission is obliged to consult the relevant person responsible in the province. In case of disagreement between the two entities, instruction should be requested from those responsible in the Leadership. Provincial, district and military squads as well as provincial representatives of the mentioned commission are not authorized to make decisions on their own regarding organizations [NGOs] and companies’ issues.

Chapter 10 – About health

61. The Health Commission of the Islamic Emirate has a special procedure in terms of arrangement of its activities. The treatment of the Mujahids shall take place in accordance with this procedure. The provincial health representatives are obliged to obey the regulations and implement the instructions of the Health commission.

Chapter 11 – Public affairs

62. Military squad leaders are not authorised to interfere with affairs of the common people, even if the local residents request the Mujahids to solve judicial issues or other matters. Only the provincial or district authority can examine the case of the applicant and through the relevant procedure, first, should try to resolve the issue via an intermediary and then by means of peaceful and lawful Jirga in a way that [the decision] will not contradict the holy Sharia. If a peaceful solution and reconciling Jirga is not possible then the parties should refer to the court. In case of the court absence, both parties should proceed on the basis of the view expressed by prominent theologians.

63. All decisions regarding issues and disputes made in a proper manner when the Islamic Emirate was in power cannot be reviewed or re-examined at this stage, even if one of the parties concerned is not satisfied [with the decision]. This is because in those days there were better conditions for justice than nowadays.

64. Persons responsible for Mujahids and persons affiliated with them should not interfere with common people’s disputes nor should they take sides in a dispute or go to judges or courts as an intermediary or supporter.

65. The persons responsible in the provinces and districts, squad leaders and all other Mujahids should take maximum measures to avoid deaths and injuries among common people, as well as the loss of their vehicles and other properties. In case of carelessness, each one will be held responsible according to their acts and position, and will be punished depending on the nature of their misconduct.
66. If a responsible person or ordinary person harms common people in the name of the Mujahids, the superior [of the perpetrator] is obliged to correct this ordinary person or responsible person. In case the superior fails to correct [the perpetrator], they should report to the Leadership through the person responsible in the provinces. The Leadership will then punish the ordinary person or responsible one according to its judgement. The Leadership can expel [the perpetrator] from the rows of the Mujahids, if considered necessary.

Chapter 12 – About prohibitions

67. From the beginning of the Movement until now, weapons were collected on a huge scale. The collection conducted [by now] is enough and sufficient. From now on, no weapon shall be collected by force for the Public Treasury.
68. In line with the previous order, the Mujahids should strongly avoid smoking cigarettes.
69. Non-adults (underage persons without beards) are forbidden to live in the Mujahids residential places and military centres.
70. In the light of Sharia, cutting off parts of the human body (ears, nose, and lips) is strictly prohibited. The Mujahids should strictly prevent such practices.
71. The Mujahids of the Islamic Emirate must not collect by force ‘ushr, zakat and chanda’. If they receive something through ushr and zakat, they should cover their Sharia expenditures from this income.
72. The Mujahids should not search people’s houses. If a search was strictly necessary, then they will obtain permission from the person responsible for the district. The Imam of the mosque in the village and two village elders should accompany the Mujahids during the search.
73. Kidnapping people for money for any reason is prohibited. The persons responsible in the relevant area must firmly prevent this. If people commit this kind of act in the name of the Islamic Emirate, the provincial responsible person should disarm these criminals and give them a strong punishment, following the instructions given by the Leadership.

Chapter 13 – Recommendations

74. Every [military] squad leader is required to spare special time for jihadi training, as well as religious and moral teachings and education of his colleagues. When they are not fighting or there is no emergency [situation], they should not be negligent about their training [and education].

20 ‘Lagharzani’ in Pashto version.
21 ‘Musla’ in the Pashto version.
22 Different kinds of Islamic taxation and donation system.
75. If there is no danger, Mujahids should worship in the mosque collectively. If going to the mosque is difficult, they should worship together in their places of residence.

   Special care should be given to recite [read] the Koran\(^{23}\) and praise God\(^{24}\), because praising and recitation bring satisfaction and strength in the minds.

76. The Mujahid’s strength of mind should be dedicated to military activity. They should keep themselves away from people’s problems and local conflicts. On one hand, these problems cause extra work; on the other hand, it brings unnecessary conflict of interest among people and the Mujahids themselves. However if there is a case which the Mujahids cannot ignore, they should act in accordance with Article 62.

77. All staff of the Islamic Emirate should try their best to convince people who are deceived by the opposition to surrender and to put their weapons down. On one hand, the enemy ranks will be weakened, and on the other hand, the obstacles created by local people will decrease. Moreover, in some cases the Mujahids can obtain weapons and ammunitions [from the surrenders].

78. The Mujahids have the duty to behave well with people in accordance with Islamic ethic and moral values, and should try to win hearts and minds of ordinary Muslims. A Mujahid should represent the whole Islamic Emirate in a way that all fellow compatriots will welcome him, and be ready to assist and collaborate with him.

79. The Mujahids should keep themselves away from all sorts of ethnic, linguistic, and regional prejudices.

   There is a narration from Hazrat Abu Horeira, may God be pleased with him, saying that the Prophet of God, may peace be upon him, had deigned to speak: ‘When the one who is fighting under an unknown flag (referring to a person advancing with closed eyes; the good and bad of him cannot be determined), or the one who is angry (upset) due to ethnic prejudice (which is not the word of Allah), or who invites people to ethnocentrism (and not to Almighty Allah), or who assists someone for ethnic reasons (not for Almighty Allah) is killed, this person will die in ignorance and darkness (like during the period before Islam)’.

80. A superior responsible [person] should audit from time to time his subordinate regarding the Jihad’s items and financial expenditures.

81. The Mujahids should adapt their physical appearance such as hairstyle, clothes, and shoes in the frame of Sharia and according to the common people of the area. On one hand, the Mujahids and local people will benefit from this in terms of security, and on another hand, will allow Mujahids to move easily in different directions.

Chapter 14 – About the Laiha

82. An amendment in this Laiha is the sole authority of the Islamic Emirate and Advisory Council of the Islamic Emirate. If someone else dares to bring changes or violates its rules, his excuse will not be accepted.

83. The Military commission as well as the provincial and district commissions have a duty to keep the Mujahids informed about the provisions of this Laiha and other decrees of the Islamic Emirate and to ensure its implementation.

84. In case of facing a situation that is not discussed in the booklet, Mujahids should take advice from the person responsible in their districts. In case of failure at this level, the issue must be referred to the person responsible in the province. If a solution is not found, the person responsible in the province should ask for instructions from the organizing director. In case of not finding a solution, the organizing director should ask for instructions from the Leadership.

85. It is compulsory for all the Mujahids to act upon and follow the articles [of the Laiha]. The violator will be treated according to Islamic principles.

May Allah give us his favour Honourable Mujahid brothers!

- All your intentions and conduct should be in accordance with divine directions and the doctrine of the Prophet.
- You should stand before the enemy as steel; events and propaganda should not shake your persistence.
- You should give a place in your hearts to your Mujahid brothers and to your people; keep strong links of brotherhood and loyalty with them in order to prevent the enemy being successful in his ill-fated aim of spreading disunity.
- Conduct all your Jihad activities and operations on the base of consultations, carefulness, inventiveness and rationality.
- Never act based on personal dislike, preferences, indifference and urgency when giving somebody a punishment.
- The protection of public properties as well as life and properties of common people is regarded as one of the basic responsibilities of Mujahids. Therefore, you should do your best in order to act in accordance with this responsibility and do not let ambition and indulgence in worldly pleasures arm persons to offend common people or to damage their property in order to get material wealth.
