Country context

Decades after the conflict in Viet Nam, explosive remnants of war continue to contaminate the land threatening people's lives and impeding development. More than 350,000 people are still listed as missing and pollution from herbicides like Agent Orange continue to affect the population. Recognised as country prone to natural disasters, Viet Nam's 3,200-kilometre coast is battered by up to 10 storms a year causing loss of life and damage to property. Territorial disputes in the South China Sea/East Sea continue to make headlines.

Recognition of international humanitarian law

All over the world, the ICRC encourages states to ratify and implement international humanitarian law treaties. The ICRC regularly seeks dialogue with governments, universities, armed forces and police to promote understanding of international humanitarian law and for its inclusion in trainings and curricula.

In Viet Nam, the ICRC works closely with the armed forces (army, navy and peace-keepers) organising courses on international humanitarian law. Every year, the ICRC sponsors high-ranking officers to take part in regional and international conferences, including the major Asia-Pacific regional seminar on the Law of Armed Conflict at Sea.

The ICRC also works with Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Viet Nam Red Cross organising seminars on topics related to humanitarian law as well as sponsoring officials to attend conferences.

The ICRC is currently working with academic institutions in Viet Nam to incorporate international humanitarian law into the curriculum. Every year it supports law students from universities to take part in an ICRC moot court competition, including the annual Regional International Humanitarian Law Moot Court Competition in Hong Kong.

Partnering with Viet Nam Red Cross

The ICRC works closely with National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies globally to ensure a concerted and rapid response to armed conflicts or situations of violence as well as dealing with the legacy of conflict.

The ICRC provides financial and technical support to Viet Nam Red Cross (VNRC) that allows VNRC to train, prepare and respond to any emergency. The partnership with VNRC focuses mainly on strengthening its programmes on mine risk education and support to victims of unexploded ordnance, as well as the correct use of Red Cross emblems and the adoption of Safer Access Framework, which is the set of guidelines that will improve their safety in sensitive and insecure situations. The ICRC has also been supporting VNRC in the restoration of family links and tracing missing persons.

The ICRC, in co-ordination with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, also supports members of the leadership of VNRC to take part in regional or international conferences and meetings.

Building forensic capacity

When people die during wars or natural disasters, or while migrating, the remains of unknown individuals must be recovered and identified, their bodies handled respectfully and with dignity.

In Viet Nam, the ICRC organized two sensitization workshops on how to manage the dead in humanitarian emergencies for forensic doctors in both Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City in co-operation with National Institute of Forensic Medicine (NIFM). In the future, the ICRC will provide training to the authorities on the management of the dead during emergencies (logistics, recovery, transport, storage, identification). The ICRC sponsors forensic experts to attend international courses related to forensic science and translates the ICRC publications on forensics into Vietnamese. Discussions have also begun to draft guidelines on the Management of the Dead during emergencies.
